Vergilian Bibliography 2002–2003

Alexander G. McKay

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the forty-first in the Vergilius series. Classical World 68:1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society Inc., contains my “Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographic Survey, 1964–1973.” The survey was reprinted in The Classical World Bibliography of Vergil, Walter Donihlan, ed. New York and London: Garland 1978. Subsequent reviews have appeared in Vergilius 19 (1973) to 48 (2002).

The 2002–2003 compilation is greatly indebted to the assistance and cooperation of two libraries in particular: Mills Memorial Library, McMaster University, and The Robarts Library, University of Toronto. Notices, offprints, and facsimilies of articles, chapters and titles have been generously supplied by authors, editors, and subscribers. Scholars, authors, editors and publishers are cordially invited and encouraged to send material and advice to the editor:

Lipka (31) argues that fagus in Vergil's Eclogues denotes a Greek tree, not the conventional Latin "beech." The Greek phegus (replaced by drus) carries connotations relating to Greek Hellenistic poetry, Callimachus et al.

Schultz accents the realistic aspect of pastoral in detecting tension between the attitude of the herdsmen towards the environment and Palaemon's, a pessimistic attitude competing with a sense of harmony. Petrovitz explores the linguistic element of allusion in Bucolic 7, where Theocritus is the principal source of allusion.

Wiik examines the form and content of the excursus at Georgics 1.461–514, which is by design part of a didactic project relating to the cosmos. The catalogue of portents is analyzed from the perspective of the didactic genre. Kaster provides a general account of the emotion of invidia and applies some of its implications to a pivotal passage in the Georgics. Nappa's study of bilingual wordplay brings coolness suggestively into the foreground: "cold blood will have surrounded my consciousness ... set me down in the cool vale of Haemus." Elsewhere, Nappa argues that fire lies at the root of human failure in the steady process of labor; failure of success rests with human choice. Egan grapples convincingly with the interpretation and implications of quo munere (520).

Beck-Chauvard studies the grieving mother of Euryalus (Aen. 9.481–3) and Dido as Vergil’s female community in grief, comparable to paternal sorrows of Mezentius and Evander. Boyd’s revision of Pharr’s monumental school text includes updates and additions to provide support for Advanced Placement classes. Clausen’s study of decorum, allusion and ideology, is a greatly revised version of his Berkeley Sather Lecture (1987), entitled Vergil’s Aeneid and the Tradition of Hellenistic Poetry. The La Fleur/McKay Upper Level student book (hardcover) includes Advanced Placement readings and meets requirements of the International Baccalaureate Latin syllabus. A substantial Teacher’s Guide contains extensive discussion and teaching tips, literal translation of all selections, a bibliography and resource list. Galinsky’s perceptive comments on drama in the epic are instructive, insightful and valid. Perkell’s important article studies contradictions as a recurrent feature of Vergil’s work and recognizes interpretive challenges faced by scholars and others. The text offers no resolution of the contradictions in Vergil’s presentation of the Golden Age; they abide as Vergil’s acknowledgment of a complex world replete with uncertainties. Putnam’s article deals with ways to assess the epic and is both direct and familiar.

Adkin treats in silentum consilium, and equates silentes with the dead. Eidinow studies interplay between Catullus 61 and Dido's lament to appreciate the position of Iulus and the differences between the relationship that produced Iulus and the one that has not produced parvulus Aeneas. Aeneas leaves Dido because of his son's right to inheritance and his obligation to provide it. Hardie interprets the sixth formal ecphrasis in the epic partly in response to the constraints of Michael Putnam's earlier study and moves beyond the narrow frame of the (complete) myth of Ganymede into wider structures of significance. Kyriakidis associates fractas with the Sirens who are "excluded" from Aeneas' sea passage; their spell-binding talents are outside Vergil's intentions. McGowan enriches appreciation of the brutal boxing match, a favorite spectator sport for Augustus. Etymology suggests that contestant Dares derives from Greek dero (= "flog, flay"). Clark examines the Gorgons as guardians and argues that Aeneas and the Sibyl leave Orcus' house by the entrance door. Kraggerud analyses veris umbris (894) in Vergil's reinterpretation of Homer's Gates of Dreams (Odyssey 19.562–567), and transfers 893–895 (excluding 896) to follow 897–898.

Cucchiarelli studies Pallas' bullae in detail. Good-luck tokens elsewhere are evocative of infancy and the felicitas of a puer; in the sword-belt context, they underscore the cruel violation of youth. The sound effects of 942–943 are melancholy and oppressive: BALteus . BULLis/ PALLantis PUeri.

Chew’s remarks on ignorance, uncertainty and inconsistency in Aeneas’ nature are helpful. Hughes examines the structure and characterization of Hector’s return to Troy and his meeting with Andromache (Iliad 6) to help shape our understanding of the relationship between Aeneas and Dido. Merriam sees the appearances of Ascanius as a barometer of storms and turmoil and near disasters. Alden Smith imparts a “modern” touch to Dido’s “performance” in the guise of a chanteuse, a British diva whose stanzas relate the loss of her “cowboy” in “My Lover’s Gone” [“No Angel” album, Arista Records 1999]. Starr shows how experience with rhetoric and oratory enriches Vergil’s presentation of Aeneas and his dilemma at Aeneid 4.279–285. The Bacchic associations of Amata, another tragic queen, as frenzied Bacchant, and Aeneas’ dual nature, both Apolline and Dionysian, offer readers and critics important new avenues for reflection on the ambiguity and characterization of two memorable performers.

Boyd's response to the three panelists and her observations on the Vergilian Society's 2002 topic, extols and enlarges the compass and implications of their offerings. Butrica studies two passages: Vergil, Aeneid 3.274–280, and Propertius 3.11.69–72, and includes an appendix on Apollo Palatinus (310–311). Huskey argues that Ovid's allusion to Aeneid 2 and 4 conflates Aeneas' multiple departures and creates an intertextual commentary on his own departure from Rome in Tristia 1.3. Keith highlights Ovid's sensitivity to the martial themes of Vergil's epic during his career but particularly in the Perseid in Metamorphoses 4 and 5. Vergilian diction is carefully redeployed but there are striking differences in the recollected scenes. Nappa provides a model of intertextual relationships between Ovid's Metamorphoses and Vergil's Georgics in his study of Ovidian readings of two passages from Vergil's Georgics 1.61–63, and 4.453–527. The Levine-Nelis compilation includes Vergilian material: V. E. Pagan's "Actium and Teutoberg: Augustan Victory and Defeat in Virgil and Tacitus," A. Feldherr's "Stepping Out of the Ring: Repetition and Sacrifice in the Boxing Match in Aeneid 5," Clifford Ando's "Vergil's Italy: Ethnography and Politics in First-Century Rome," Marko Marincic's "Roman Archaeology in Vergil's Arcadia," Andreola Rossi's "The Fall of Troy: Between Tradition and Genre," and Rhiannon Ash's "Ancient Historical Battle Narratives and the Epic Tradition."

Carter detects Vergil's name in an acrostic in Aeneid 12: pu - ve - maro. Brown detected another at Georgics 1.429–433 in 1963. Edwards underscores the effects of word order and meter as vital to proper appreciation of the meaning of classical poetry which was composed for listeners.

Harrison is concerned with the organic or functional role of ekphrases in narratives. Archaic and Classical Greek texts, and Hellenistic poetry, are cited prior to examination of examples in Catullus and Vergil (especially 87–92). He concludes “modern narrative theory can help us to bring new and valuable perspectives to the critical appreciation of familiar ancient texts.” (92)

Coppolino notices that Columella's Book 10 emulates Vergil in language, programmatic statements, ideas, use of poetic tradition, poetic didacticism, thematic contrast and statements of poetic aspiration. Dickie detects three borrowings from Vergil in Manilius' prooemium and argues for rejection of 91–94 as non-authentic.
