ANNUAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vergilian Bibliography 2005-2006

ALEXANDER G. McKAY

This survey of Vergilian scholarship is the forty-fourth in the Vergilius series. Classical World 68.1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my "Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographic Survey, 1964-73." The survey was reprinted in The Classical World Bibliography of Vergil, Walter Donlan, ed., New York and London: Garland 1978. Subsequent reviews have appeared in Vergilius 19 (1973)—51 (2005).

The 2005-2006 compilation is greatly indebted to the assistance and cooperation of two libraries: Mills Memorial Library, McMaster University, and The Robarts Library, University of Toronto. Notices, offprints, and facsimiles of articles, chapters, and titles have been generously supplied by authors, editors, publishers, and subscribers. Readers are cordially invited and encouraged to send material and advice to the Editor:

Macdonald studies the two songs in Eclogue 8 and detects a concentric arrangement of allusions to Theocritus' Idylls. Vergil uses the structure of the spell from Idyll 2 in both songs of Eclogue 8, but the second follows Simaetha's spell more closely. The contest songs create tension between internal and external imitation.

Geymonat studies the vocatives at the start and finish of the Eclogue-Book. Shepherd and goats provide two extremes, both associated closely with the poet, and accenting the performance.

Kraggerud accepts Heyne's (te) in Eclogue 10.44 as inescapable in the context of Gallus' outburst: nunc insanus amor dum te martis in armis.

Edgeworth/Stem explores Vergilian silence on points of interpretive value for the reader: Danaids in Tartarus? Return of Turnus' corpse? The silence reinforces the ambivalent ending of the epic. Danaids on the balteus of Pallas compound pietas and nefas. The counterweight of Aeneas' moral failure in killing Turnus lies in the relief that the killing secures Rome's future. "This revelation grinds the heart in sorrow and yet gives hope in darkness" (166)

Konstan rejects the assumption that clementia had negative connotations during the 1st century BC and later. The traditional meaning is incorporated into the clupeus virtutis presented to Augustus. Lobe offers a perceptive study of the meaning and function of body-language around Roman epic. Alden Smith examines the implications of the Augustan transition from rhetoric to images to extol imperial power. Vergil is part of the contemporary process giving primacy to imagery over speech in the sensational epic adventures of Aeneas. Close reading of crucial episodes reveal that Aeneas repeatedly acts on what he see rather than what he hears. Suerbaum searches for bucolic elements in the Aeneid. Bucolic motifs far outweigh the factor of language. Shepherds appear not as singers but as fighters (Book 7); the wonderland of Arcadia and Book 8 is a close reflection. The major link is the subjective voice, the voice of compassion.

Horsfall provides a detailed commentary on Aeneid 3, called "The Dullest Book" in earlier days. The pages shimmer with fresh insights and a myriad of details. Students and scholars will welcome this first detailed commentary, with text, translation, and three indices. Dehon detects winter as the season for the African episode. Astronomy, meteorology, and chronology allude to a wintry atmosphere which prefigures the rupture and the lamentable ending. Monitto favors coniugium.

Fratantuono (111) judges Book 5, the penultimate book of Vergil's "Odyssey," as overall the happiest: laetus is a key word; Book 11, the penultimate book of the epic, is saddest: maestus is a key word. Both books share important links and together help readers to understand the epic as a whole. Perotti deals with the literary cliché of Book 9, by foregrounding Louis de Berniere's novel, Il Mandolino del capitano Corelli (Milano 1996), "Captain Corelli's Mandolin" in the film version, features male lovers, Francesco and Carlo Guercia, in a catastrophic night mission.

129. Leah Kronenberg. "Mezentius the Epicurean." TAPA 135 (2005) 403-31.

Kronenberg argues that Mezentius, surpassing Dido, evokes Epicurean philosophy in a manner that allows for an Epicurean reading of the poem's action. The Epicurean element in Mezentius helps to explain his surprising transformation from a symbol of impietas to pietas in Books 7-10, "as well as the reverse transformation of pious Aeneas into an impious Giant figure" (403). "Aeneas assumes the role of impious monster just as Mezentius is transformed into a pious philosopher." (425). Kronenberg offers a disturbing essay. However, Vergil's characters so often intertwine philosophic allusions with other sorts of literary models and codes that Epicurean readings of Dido and Mezentius cannot be proved "comprehensively wrong."

The Vergilian Society's overseas headquarters at Cumae has served for decades as center for graduate and undergraduate study, seminars, colloquia and symposia on topics germane to Vergilian study and to the Campanian landscape. A symposium during February 2003 entitled, "Teaching Classics and Archaeology on AACUPI [Association of American Colleges and Universities in Italy] Programs," convened as a memorial to the late John H. D'Arms, Campania's exceptional champion and Vergilian scholar, solicited papers from Barnes, Fears, McKay and Skinner, which were duly edited and published in 2004 by Portia Prebys, President AACUPI.

Spatafora and Vassallo highlight achievements and insights gained by archaeological work in central-west Sicily during recent decades. Indigenous populations at Elymian Entella, at Himera and elsewhere, evidently enjoyed productive relations with their colonial neighbors. Aeneas's encounter with Trojan Acestes and the Phoenician cult in the region of Mount Eryx seems pertinent.

Hodgkinson accents references and compliments to Vergil's audacious epic in Horace's propemptikon for the "long day's journey into night." Impressed by what he has read of the early parts of the Aeneid, Horace invokes warnings in lending his support. Both poets are engaged in the process of bringing the glories of civilized literature to the Latin language. Their amity complements the boldness that leads them both to mark exceptional progress in the poetic field. Holzberg's Horatian bibliography, a privately printed tribute to Werner Suerbaum's exemplary role as Vergilian bibliographer, is remarkable for its coverage and support for Augustan verse. Keith senses a connection between Vergil's Dido episode in Book 4 and the elegies of Sulpicia. She argues, inter alia, that "Vergil's portrayal of the love of Dido and Aeneas provides Sulpicia with a framework in which to articulate a woman's love for a man." Nisbet and Rudd comment helpfully and expertly on topics germane to Horace and Vergil. Warrior's Livy, Books 1-5, provides a skillfully rendered translation enhanced by a consistent style and comprehensive concern for details.

Bernays is concerned with arithmetic exactitude in poetry and argues that Vergil followed the realm of absolute figures and divisible ratios in the Bucolics and the Aeneid (19-25); however, structural aspects require some drastic measures with the texts of Eclogues 2, 8, 9 and 10. McGill probes Epigrammata Bobiensia 46, 47 and 64, Latin versions of Greek epigrams on teachers. He argues for equivalent uses of the Iliad and Aeneid as central school texts in Greek and Latin grammatical schools.

The element of humorous incongruity enriches the poem. Van Dam proclaims Vergil as the 'privileged author' in the Silvae with particular attention to 2.1; 1.4; 3.4; and 3.1.

Van Sickle's article from the outset highlights Homer and Dante. Vergilian influence emerges in a programmatic encounter involving Aeneas with his father Anchises' shade and prefiguring Walcott's with his father's ghost. That circumstance shapes the first three books with their focus on St. Lucia and Africa. "Vergilian reeds" protrude in the chapters defining poetics for Books 4 and 5 where the poet's exile in the north is related to the exile of Native Americans from their territories. The reeds trigger research leading to the Bucolics of W. H. Auden, where he synthesized Theocritean and Vergilian bucolic. The linkage with Auden and Vergil provides a backdrop for the fusion of bucolic and georgic themes in Walcott's recollection of the North American West.

McDonald's collection of pastoral verses includes "Eclogue," an imitation of Vergil in the most emotionally engaged of the neoclassical pieces. Two voices debate the contemporary "troubles" as they traverse the Castlereagh Hills above Belfast; one is about to leave the city again. Tsao's novel is a modern version of the Aeneas and Dido tragic romance, beginning in 1959 in the Soviet Union and continuing into Communist China. Vasily (Zhao Huaxing, Aeneas) has been forced to leave his beloved Sophia in Russia where he cannot return nor can he convey her to China as the rift between the nations broadens. Vasily senses a parallel between Aeneas' determination to fulfill his destiny and his own dedication to his Party.
