

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY, 1966-67

Author(s): Alexander G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1967, No. 13 (1967), pp. 35-41

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41592282>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY, 1966-67

ECLOGUES.

1. Giovanni Castelli, 'Echi lucreziani nelle ecloghe virgiliane' Revista di Studi Classici 15 (1967) 14-39 (continued from 14 (1966) 313ff).
2. J. A. Notopoulos, 'Silenus the Scientist', CJ 62 (1967) 308-9.
3. H. des Abbayes, Virgile: Les Bucoliques, (with an introduction by E. de Saint-Denis) (Collection Latomus, 1966).
4. R. A. Hornsby, Reading Latin Poetry (Oklahoma, 1967) 6-13, 194-7, 185-90.
5. William Berg, 'Daphnis and Prometheus', TAPA 96 (1965) 11-24.
6. Eleanor Winsor Leach, 'Nature and Art in Vergil's Second Eclogue' AJP 87 (1966) 427-445.

After his previous review of Vergil's Epicureanism and of Epicurean motifs in his poetry, Castelli (1) proceeds to a study of hedone (otium) in the Eclogues, and of Epicurean expression and concept in the death and apotheosis of Daphnis (Ecl. 5). Notopoulos (2) has discovered that there is fifth century evidence for scientific knowledge among the satyrs (Oxy. Pap. 8 (1911) 1083, p. 60) and that Silenus' scientific expertise in Ecl. 6 is not a Vergilian novelty. Des Abbayes' verse translation of the Eclogues is perfectly attuned to the original (3). Hornsby's 'new method' text (4) provides, inter alia, criticism, questions and exercises for Eclogues 1, 4, and 5. Berg (5) finds Prometheus as the forerunner of Daphnis in E. 5. He suggests an Aeschylean inspiration for the Eclogue, a satyr-play and the more serious tradition which Aeschylus advances in the P. V. Daphnis, as devoted benefactor of the pastoral world, finds his benefactor-model in the philanthropic Prometheus. Julius Caesar and his successor could also be imagined in the same heroic dimension. Eleanor Leach (6) assesses the second Eclogue as a paradigm for the entire collection, which favors the pattern of withdrawal and return in Corydon's conduct. 'For him all pastoral is a deliberate experiment, and the pastoral world is a temporary place of discovery and organization for the poet and for man'.

GEORGICS

7. J. J. H. Savage (and J. A. Thayer), 'The Wine of Maron', TAPA 96 (1965) 375-402.
8. Charles Segal, 'Orpheus and the Fourth Georgic: Virgil on Nature and Civilization', AJP 87 (1966) 307-25.

Savage (7) examines the associations of Vergil's cognomen Maro and suggests that in the course of the second Georgic Vergil reflected on his own identity, linking himself with the historical Maron at Thermopylae, the mythical Maron of Ismarus, whose wine later subdued Polyphemus, and even (in the Culex) correlating the Gnat with a putative ancestor who roused the aged shepherd (Hellas) to resist the monstrous serpent (Xerxes' host). Vergilius is associated, by Savage, with the Greek Pleiades, as is his mother Magia-Maia. Segal (8) finds different attitudes to nature in both Aristaeus and Orpheus who 'frame' the essentially tragic life of the bees. There is, he feels, a thematic contrast of man and the bees, and there is also a stylistic contrast between the first and second half of the book, between a Lucretian and a more Homeric, more characteristically Vergilian half. And there is a more fundamental and revealing contrast between the 'real' world of bees and the 'ideal' world of myth and poetry, which unlike the former, is filled with death and disaster.

AENEID

9. John Wright, 'Lacrimae rerum and the thankless task', CJ 62 (1967) 365-7.
10. L. Herrmann, 'Crinitus Iopas (Virgile Ēn. I, 740)', Latomus 26 (1967) 474-6.
11. José Sanz Ramos, 'Notas al Libro II de la 'Eneida'', Estudios clásicos, 10 (1966) 150-69.
12. Henry T. Rowell, 'The Ancient Evidence of the Helen Episode in Aeneid II', in The Classical Tradition. Literary and Historical Studies in Honor of Harry Caplan (ed. Luitpold Wallach) (Ithaca, 1966), 210-21.
13. Bernardo Muñoz Sánchez, 'Otra interpretación del 'traiecta lora' de Virgilio', Estudios clásicos 10 (1966) 170-3.
14. G. Stegen, 'Une prétendue contradiction dans l'Énéide (2, 567-86)', LEC 35 (1967) 3-6.
15. Richard J. O'Brien, S.J., and Heil J. Twombly, S.J., Vergil's Aeneid, Books I and II: Paraphrase and Structure Questions. Experimental Edition. (Georgetown University Latin Series) Loyola University Press, Chicago, 1966.
16. W. F. Jackson Knight, Vergil: Epic and Anthropology, edited by John D. Christie (London, Geo. Allen and Unwin, 1967).
17. Alexander G. McKay, 'Aeneas' Landfalls in Hesperia', G&R 14 (1967) 3-11.
18. Michael von Albrecht, 'Vergils Geschichtsauffassung in der 'Heldenschau'', Wiener Studien 80 (1967) 156-82.
19. J. J. Bray, 'The Ivory Gate (Vergil, Aen. 6, 893-8)', in For Service to Classical Studies. Essays in Honour of Francis Letters. Edited by Maurice Kelly. (Melbourne, Canberra, Sydney, 1966) chapter 5.
20. Harry C. Rutledge, 'Vergil's Daedalus', CJ 62 (1967) 309-11.
21. John W. Zarker, 'Aeneas and Theseus in Aeneid 6', CJ 62 (1967) 220-6.
22. Charles P. Segal, 'Aeternum per saecula nomen, The Golden Bough and the Tragedy of History II', Arion 5: 1 (1966) 34-72.
23. G. Stegen, 'Le supplice de Phlégyas! Etude sur un épisode de l'Eneide', Latomus 26 (1967) 118-22.
24. Will W. de Grummond, 'Vergil's Diomedes', Phoenix 21 (1967) 40-3.
25. Michael J. Cannon, S.J., 'Vergil's Characterization in the Eighth Aeneis', CB 43 (1967) 85-7.
26. G. E. Duckworth, 'The Significance of Nisus and Euryalus for Aeneid IX-XII' AJP 68 (1967) 129-50.

27. G. Lieberg 'La dea Giunone nell' Eneide di Vergilio', Atena e Roma 11 (1966) 145-65.
28. Anne Booth, 'Venus on the Ara Pacis', Latomus 25 (1966) 873-9.
29. Brigitte Grassman-Fischer, Die Prodigien in Vergils Aeneis (Studia et Testimonia Antiqua 4) (Munich, 1966).
30. Hartmut Erbse, 'Über die sogenannte Aeneis im 20 Buch der Ilias', Rh. Mus. 110 (1967) 1-25.
31. Eduard Norden, Ennius and Vergilius. Kriegsbilder aus Roms grosser Zeit. (Originally published, Leipzig, 1915). Wissensch. Buchgesellschaft, Darmstadt, 1966.
32. E. A. Havelock, 'History and Counter-History in the Aeneid', Ventures: Magazine of the Yale Graduate School (Spring, 1967) 40-6.
33. Joe Park Poe, 'Success and Failure in the Mission of Aeneas', TAPA 96 (1965) 321-336.

John Wright (9) discovers that Jackson Knight's estimate of A. 1, 461-2 is best satisfied by Richard Stanyhurst's Elizabethan translation. Hermann, with characteristic ingenuity, argues that Iopas is a pseudonym for Maecenas and that Iopas' song shows traces of a Prometheus composed by his Augustan patron (10). Hermann imagines the long-haired Iopas, with his intimations of Lucretius and Maecenas, as a last homage to his generous benefactor. Rowell (12) argues that Servius derived all his information about the Helen episode from Donatus' commentary which expressed no doubt about the authenticity of the verses. Donatus trusted his sources on this matter and complied with their view. Stégen (14) argues for the retention of vv. 567-88 on grounds of their harmony with the immediate and general context. O'Brien and Twombly (15) have composed a useful teaching manual for A. 1 and 2. Jackson Knight's earlier and important studies entitled Vergil's Troy: Essays on the Second Book of the Aeneid (Basil Blackwell, 1932) and Cumaeae Gates: A Reference in the Sixth Aeneid to Initiation Patterns (Basil Blackwell, 1936) have been combined in a posthumously published collection with an essay from Vergilius, 1939, "The Holy City of the East" (16). McKay (17) provides topographical and historical commentary on the promontories of Palinurus, Misenum and Caieta with up-to-date archaeological accounts. Von Albrecht's (18) account of A. 6, 679-892 is a valuable review of earlier theories regarding the march-past and offers new insights. J. J. Bray's (19) contribution to the Francis Letters volume gives a full discussion of A. 6, 893-8, with critical attention to the views of Jackson Knight and Brooks Otis. Rutledge (20) examines the role of the artist, thaumaturge, creative man and benevolent ruler and finds that 'the artist Daedalus is a recurrent figure, or motif, on various levels of significance, throughout Vergil's poetry', but the greatest of them all is Augustus. Zarker (21) argues that the four panels of the temple doors at Cumae foreshadow and give greater significance to Theseus' adventures. An epic figure from the past, he becomes Vergil's vehicle for a tacit censure of the morality and spiritual direction of Greeks and Athenians. Aeneas is encouraged to avoid the less attractive characteristics and qualities of the Athenian hero and emerges as a nobler hero who has profited from the exempla temporis acti. Segal's (22) continuation of his earlier essay follows the themes that center about the Golden Bough through the rest of Aeneid 6 and explores some of their implications for the Aeneid as a whole. The article is filled with sensitive insights and commonsense. Aeneas disappoints because 'he is cast in the mold of the Augustus from Prima Porta, not that of Hamlet: he suffers from his political responsibilities and his Augustan model'. The Marcellus passage is not merely Vergil's In Memoriam to the heir apparent but 'as an instance of intense grief in the present, he sums up for Vergil and his audience the previous sufferings in Rome's past, and points ahead to sufferings to come'. Caieta, for Segal, is the replacement for the mother who cannot die, and her death completes Aeneas' experience with the loss of persons near and dear to him: Palinurus, Misenus, Anchises and Caieta. Finally he explores the mythical and philosophical aspects of the Bough, which belongs to both the upper and lower worlds and images the fundamental reality of man's position between both. Stegen (23) reconstructs the prose redaction of A. 6, 595-655 and discovers two main groups in the interior of Hades: (a) the enemies of Jupiter and (b) other guilty parties (575-584; 595-627). He argues against Havet's insertion of 616-20 between 601 and 602 and against the substitution of quo for quos at v. 602. De Grummond (24) finds a fully realised figure of epic scope in Diomedes, a fighter become philosopher-king, idealized yet warm, dignified, and courageous. A new Diomedes has risen from the old likeness, regenerated in his cherished Saturnia regna. Cannon (25) examines the characterization of Turnus, Pallas, Evander, Venus and Vulcan, and finds them masterly and realistic. Duckworth's study of Nisus and Euryalus (26) concludes that Vergil offers 'in dramatic form a psychological study of two youths whose motives are basically noble but who do the wrong things and suffer tragic deaths as a result.' He argues that the story is neither an independent unit nor digression. He regards the story as preparation for the poet's treatment of character and event in 9-12, and as of the utmost importance in foreshadowing the fate of Turnus. Lieberg (27) recognises the fundamental importance of Juno's role in the epic. The motif of a Juno able to compromise probably derives from both Naevius and Ennius, a character which Horace develops in Odes III, 3. The reconciliation between Jupiter – Fate and Juno yields a higher synthesis; and Juno enters the Roman pantheon as a tutelary numen of Romula gens. Anne Booth's archaeological study (28) draws on the Vergilian Venus for elucidation of the Ara Pacis panel of Tellus Mater/Italia. Grassman-Fischer (29) offers a valuable study of omens and prodigies in the epic, and a compilation of evidence which may later yield vital information on the imaginative use of these hallowed signs. Erbse (30) speculates on the origins of the Aeneas-Achilles combat in Homer's Iliad 20 and provides some valuable comments on the character of the Vergilian hero and, by suggestion, some antique facets in his ultimate combat with Turnus. Norden's fundamental study of Ennius and Vergil (31) has been republished. Its availability will spark new interest and give wider consideration of the poets' relationship. Havelock's essay (32) examines the subterranean area of frustration, insecurity and even guilt which readers have sometimes sensed in the epic, lurking beneath the surface of the actual events. 'If in the first six books, Virgil remembered the agony and moral cost of the conflict with Carthage, in the last six, it can be suggested, he puts on record his own interpretation of the civil wars of the first century B.C., which left Augustus to preside over a ravaged countryside, and an exhausted people'.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA, VITAE, ETC.

34. E. Courtney, 'Notes on the Appendix Vergiliana', Phoenix 21 (1967) 44-55.
35. Colin Hardie (ed.), Vitae Vergilianae antiquae (Oxford Classical Texts (New York, 1966)).
36. H. Akbar Khan, 'Horace's Ode to Virgil on the Death of Quintilius: I, 24', Latomus 26 (1967) 107-17.
37. Wilhelmina F. Jashemski, 'The Caupona of Euxinus at Pompeii', Archaeology 20 (1967) 36-44.

Courtney (34) attacks some textual cruces in the Culex, Copa, Elegiae in Maecenatem, Ciris, Catalepton (1, and 14), and Moretum. Colin Hardie's Oxford Text (35) has an excellent introduction to the Lives. Akbar Khan (36) argues that Horace in Odes I, 24 refers to an elegy which Vergil had written on the death of Quintilius, an elegy which was careless of moral propriety. Horace's rejoinder is a cautionary poem, with a lesson by example, arguing that even in the case of an inestimable friend's death, pudor and modus are the proper principles to observe. Wilhelmina Jashemsky's article (37) offers valuable illustration for the Copa in the shape of a Pompeian tavern and garden.

GENERAL STUDIES, TRANSLATIONS, CLASSICAL TRADITION, BIBLIOGRAPHY

38. Charles Rowan Beye, The Iliad, the Odyssey, and the Epic Tradition (Doubleday Anchor Books, 1966) 206-34.
39. Steele Commager, Virgil: A Collection of Critical Essays (Prentice-Hall, Englewood, N. J., 1966).
40. Robert Seymour Conway, Harvard Lectures on the Vergilian Age

- (Biblo and Tanner, New York, 1967). (Originally published, Harvard University Press, 1928).
41. Albert Cook, The Classical Line: A Study in Epic Poetry (Indiana, 1966) 177-210.
 42. Fabio Cupaiuolo, Tra poesia e poetica (Libreria scientifica editrice, Naples, 1966).
 43. Paul F. Distler, Vergil and Vergiliana (Loyola University Press, Chicago, 1966).
 44. W. F. Jackson Knight, Roman Vergil. (Penguin Book) (Harmondsworth, Middlesex, 1966).
 45. W. A. Laidlaw, 'An Aspect of Augustan Poetry', Phrontisterion (Magazine of the Classical Association, University of Ibadan) 4 (1966) 18-22.
 46. W. A. Laidlaw, 'Virgil, Aeneid', Nigeria and the Classics (ed. J. Ferguson) 8 (1965) 18-27.
 47. A G O N: Journal of Classical Studies 1 (1967) (Published by the Berkeley Graduate Association of Classics, in association with the Department of Classics, University of California, Berkeley).
 48. Francesco della Corte, Vergilio Eneide. (Milano, 1967).
 49. Robert Fitzgerald (ed.) The "Aeneid" of Vergil. Translated by John Dryden. With an introduction and notes by R. Fitzgerald. (Macmillan Company, New York, 1965).
 50. Joseph B. Berrigan, 'Vinculum Pacis: Vergil and Dante', CB 43 (1966-7) 49-53.
 51. Lucrecia Bracelis Calatayud, 'El mundo de Virgilio y de Claudiano comparados' and 'Virgilio y Claudiano, poetas áulicos', Revista de estudios clásicos 9 (1965).
 52. K. W. Gransden, Paradise Lost and the Aeneid Essays in Criticism 17 (1967) 281-303.
 53. H. Gaston Hill, 'Scarron and the travesty of Virgil', Yale French Studies 38 (1967) 115-27.
 54. J. E. Haffner (with M. Hammond and M. C. J. Putnam): 'A Bibliographical Handlist on Vergil's Aeneid', CW 60 (1967) 377-88.

Beye's study of the epic tradition (38) treats the Aeneid with fresh insight and assigns Vergil a position of prominence and novelty in the tradition. Steele Commager's collected essays (39) include Bruno Snell's 'The Discovery of a Spiritual Landscape' 14-27, Jacques Perret's 'The Georgics' 28-40, Wendell Clausen's 'An Interpretation of the Aeneid' 75-88; Adam Parry's 'The Two Voices of Vergil's Aeneid' 107-123, Bernard Knox's influential 'The Serpent and the Flame: The Imagery of the Second Book of the Aeneid' 124-142, and Viktor Poschl's 'Basic Themes', 164-182. The collection should be on every teacher's shelf and in every student's library. Conway's (40) Harvard lectures with its valuable essays on the Philosophy of Vergil and the Architecture of the Epic are reprinted for an audience which has neglected them with serious consequences. Cook's study (41) and Cupaiuolo's inquiry into the cultural aspects of Latin poetry in the Augustan Age (42) are both deserving of study and notice. Distler's (43) handbook for students approaching Vergil and the Aeneid for the first time offers useful background information on the man and his times, and his achievement. Jackson Knight's revised Roman

Vergil (44) available in the English Penguin series is unfortunately unavailable in the U.S.A. Laidlaw (45) treats the interest of Augustan poets in African scenes and customs, and finds that the spotlight falls largely on the Nile valley. His other essay (46) is a general introduction to the many facets of the Aeneid. A G O N (47), a new journal from Berkeley, California, includes, as a regular feature, a list of forthcoming theses. Among the Vergilian offerings are: "Vergil's Influence on Tacitus;" "Vergil's Bucolic Hero and his Forebears;" "Word Study in the Aeneid of Vergil;" "Imagery and Symbolism in the Aeneid;" "Saevus in Vergil;" "Aeneid VIII and the Hellenistic Aition;" "The Unnamed Child: A Reading of Vergil's Messianic Eclogue;" "Rhetoric and Poetry in the Late Republic and Augustan Age;" "A Study of the Historical Epic in Rome, from the Early Republic to the Neronian Period;" "Hercules in Latin Literature of the Empire;" "Sicily and the Trojan Legend of Rome." Della Corte's translation of the Aeneid (48) has a useful but unoriginal commentary. Fitzgerald's edition of Dryden's Aeneid (49) ushers the titanic version into a crowd of newcomers, and the company is somewhat strained. Fitzgerald's introduction and notes are designed for a general audience. Berrigan's note (50) on a poetic link between Vergil and Dante is complemented by two fine articles by Lucrecia Calatayud (51) on links between Vergil and Claudian. Gransden's article (52) instances examples of the way in which Milton converts the style and mannerisms of the Aeneid, and also in a most suggestive fashion the question of Milton's manipulation of time and the reader, in the uses of tense and in indirect narration. The article is highly instructive and deserves wide reading by students of Vergilian epic in any dress. Hall's article (53) examines Scarron's burlesque of Vergil's Aeneid in 1648-59. He regards Scarron's version as an elaboration of the 'causerie en vers', a negative guide to the levels of the sublime. The prelude offers a foretaste of the burlesque which follows:

Je chante cet homme pieux
Qui vint charge de tous ses Dieux,
Et de Monsieur son pere Anchise,
Beau vieillard a la barbe grise.

Of Deiopeia, the nymph with whom Juno bribes Aeolus in A. i, 'un vrai visage de poupée', Scarron writes:

Elle entend, et parle fort bïed
L'espagnol and l'italien.

A. G. McKay

McMaster University

September, 1967