

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1967-68

Author(s): A.G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1968, No. 14 (1968), pp. 16-27

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41561804>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1967-68

ECLOGUES

1. Colin Hardie, 'Three Roman Poets', in The Romans, Edited by J.P. V.D. Balsdon (New York, 1966) 238-244.
2. Vergard Skanland, 'Litius: the Mirror of the Sea. Vergil, eccl. 2, 25' Symb. Osl. 42 (1968) 93-101.
3. William R. Nethercut, 'Trees and Identity in Aeneid 8 and Bucolic 2', Vergilius 13 (1967) 16-27.
4. A. La Penna, 'La seconda ecloga e la poesia bucolica di Virgilio', Studi in onore di Gennaro Perrotta, (Bologna, 1964) 476-484.
5. C.P. Segal 'Vergil's Caelatum Opus. An interpretation of the third Eclogue', AJP 87 (1967) 279-308.
6. Harold C. Gotoff, 'On the Fourth Eclogue of Virgil', Philologus 111 (1967) 66-79.
7. M. Bollack, 'Le retour de Saturne (Une Étude de la Quatrième Eglogue)', REL 45 (1967) 304-24.
8. Colin G. Hardie, 'The Tenth Eclogue', PVS 6 (1966-7) 1-11.
9. J. Bayet, 'Virgile et les triumvirs agris dividundis', Mélanges de littérature latine, (Paris, 1966) 169-98.
10. Louis Nougaret, "Analyse verbale comparée du De Signis et des Bucoliques", Collection d'Études Latines, Série Scientifique, 30: Prosodie, Métrique et Vocabulaire, Paris, 1966.
11. F. Robertson, 'Allegorical Interpretations of Virgil', PVS 6 (1966-7), 34-45.
12. A.J. Vaccaro, 'Adjectivación atributiva en las eglogas', Revista de estudios clásicos 10 (1966) 7-23.
13. E.V. Rieu, Virgil, The Pastoral Poems. The Text of the Eclogues with a Translation. ('The Penguin Classics', L.8). Baltimore, 1967.

14. H.E. Gould (ed.) P. Vergili Maronis Eclogae ('Modern School Classics'), Macmillan, 1967.

Colin Hardie's (1) discussion of Vergil is heavily weighted towards the bucolic poems and is distinguished for its concise elucidation and comment. Inter alia one respects his authoritative dictum that 'Georgics II, 198-9 make it quite clear that Vergil was not spared the confiscation nor ever had the family estate restored'. Skanland (2) interprets Litus as the 'part of the beach affected by the tide, the foreshore'. Nethercut's article (3) addresses several Eclogues along with *Aeneid*⁸ and 9 in his 'historical' study of Bucolic 2, and equates Corydon with Vergil (42-41 B.C.) addressing Octavian, a more precise reading than La Penna's (4). Charles Segal (5) attacks Vergil's motif of the cups and discovers meaning beyond the concrete along with a complex and suggestive unity in the third Eclogue. His interpretation of the somewhat abstruse poem explores the unresolved and probably unresolvable elements at the heart of Vergil's poetry. Gotoff (6) believes that the light inconsequential mood of the bucolic genre should discourage serious interpretations of the 'Messianic' Eclogue. The new stability which Vergil sensed after the pact of Brundisium led him, in Gotoff's view, to a carefree, extravagant answer to Horace's moody Epode 16. Madame Bollack (7) offers a comparative study of the Myth of the Ages in Lucretius 5 and Eclogue 4. Hardie's article (8) on Eclogue 10 examines the involvement of Gallus in Vergil's passage from pastoral to didactic poetry. Through Gallus, in Hardie's view, Vergil bids farewell to pastoral poetry and the Arcadian dream. Bayet's article (9) reviews old arguments and offers an incomplete review of the testimonia relating to the confiscation of the farm. Robertson (11) argues for restraint and commonsense in the interpretation of the 'meaning' of the bucolic poems, and urges particularly that scholars should avoid subordinating the poems (and the epic) to a propagandist theme, particularly when the contemporary allusions are seen through a glass darkly and incompletely. Rieu's translation (13) is prosaic and eminently useful for the novice and the scholar. Gould's school text (14), though cautious and often oblivious to recent trends in the criticism of the Bucolics, is thoroughly acceptable in the classroom and certainly more attractive than Page's morass of notes. Nougaret (10) compares 5,000 words in Cicero with 5,597 words in the Eclogues. The report classifies words by their metrical shape, and provides an analysis of Vergil's metrics, complete word lists, and the location of metrical patterns in the Eclogues.

GEORGICS

15. H. Drexler, 'Zu Vergil, Georg. I. 118-159' RhMus 110 (1967) 165-74.
16. H.H. Huxley, 'Corusca dextra or Corusca fulmina? (Georgics I, 328-9)?' Vergilius 13 (1967) 51-2.

17. R. Martin, 'Virgile et la Scythie (Géorgiques III, 349-83)' REL 444 (1966) 286=304.
18. J. Bayet, 'Un procédé virgilien: la description synthétique dans les Géorgiques', Mélanges de littérature latine, (Paris, 1966), 245-254.
19. J. Bayet, 'L'évolution de l'art de Virgile des origines aux Géorgiques', Mélanges de littérature latine, (Paris, 1966), 119-168.
20. J. Bayet, 'Les premières Géorgiques de Virgile (39-37 B.C.)' Mélanges de littérature latine, (Paris, 1966) 197-242.
21. A. Ruiz de Elvira, 'Los problemas del proemio de las Géorgicas', Emerita 35 (1967) 45-54.
22. Willi Frenzt, 'Mythologisches in Vergils Georgica', Beitrag z. klass. Philologie, 21 (1967).
23. Sir James Mountford, 'The Architecture of the Georgics', PVS 6 (1966-7) 25-34.
24. L.P. Wilkinson, 'The Georgics in After Times', PVS 6 (1966-7) 22-5.

The Georgics remain the neglected masterpiece in recent Vergilian scholarship. Most significant and directional are Frenzt's study (22) of the mythological element in the poems, a major contribution to a fundamental aspect, and Wilkinson's preview (24) of a major study of the Georgics. Wilkinson's remarks on the failure of the ancients to adopt mountain-climbing for pleasure needs the corrective of a neglected article by A.S. Pease, 'Notes on Mountain Climbing in Antiquity' in Appalachia 33 (1961) 289-298. Mountford (23) lectures on the plan and arrangement of Vergil's material in relation to his dominating purposes. Form, balance, and coherent design are his proper concern.

AENEID

25. Friedrich Klingner, Virgil: Bucolica, Georgica, Aeneis, Zurich/Stuttgart, 1967.
26. Kenneth Quinn, 'Septima Aestas', CQ 17 (1967) 128-9.
27. Feliciano Speranza, Virgilio: Eneide 2, Napoli, 1964.

28. H.L. Tracy, 'Aeneas' Visit to Buthrotum', Classical News & Views (Class. Assoc. Canada) 11:1 (1967) 1-3.
29. G. Ameye, 'Eadem impia fama . . . detulit (Virgile, Énéide IV, 298-299)' REL 44 (1966) 305-332.
30. A. La Penna, 'Amata e Didone', Maia 19 (1967) 309-18.
31. A.S. Pease, Aeneidos Liber Quartus (Cambridge, Mass., 1935): reprint, Buchgesellschaft, Darmstadt, 1967.
32. P. Grimal, 'Invidia infelix et la 'conversion' de Virgile', Hommages à Jean Bayet (ed. M. Renard, R. Schilling), Collection Latomus 70, (Brussels, 1964) 242-54.
33. J. Perret, 'Amour et mariage dans l'épisode de Didon', Hommages à Jean Bayet (ed. M. Renard, R. Schilling), Collection Latomus 70, (Brussels, 1964) 538-543.
34. T.E.V. Pearce, 'Virgil, Aeneid iv. 440', CR 18 (1968) 13-4.
35. Bertha Tilly (ed.) P. Vergili Maronis Aeneidos Liber IV ('The Palatine Classics'), London, 1968.
36. Hans Koch, 'Einige Anspielungen auf Hintergründige sacheverhalte in der ersten vier Buchern der Aeneis', Symb. Osl. 42 (1968)
37. G. Karl Galinsky, 'Aeneid V and the Aeneid: AJP 89 (1968) 157-185.
38. A.S. McDevitt, 'A note on Aeneid 5, 326', CQ 17 (1967) 313-5.
39. J. Bayet, 'Précisions sémantiques et historiques à propos de l'épithète 'pinguis': Virg. Én. VI. 195', Melanges de littérature latine, (Paris, 1966), 243-4.
40. D.E. Eichholz, 'The Shield of Aeneas: Some Elementary Notions', PVS 6 (1966-7) 45-9.
41. Hans-Albrecht Koch, 'Zum Verstandnis von Vergil, Aeneis 6, 205ff' WSt 81 (1968) 70-73.
42. Charles P. Segal, 'The Hesitation of the Golden Bough: A Re-examination', Hermes 96 (1968) 74-9.

43. G. Stegen, 'Virgile et la métempsychose (Aen. VI. 742-51)' L'Ant. Class. 36 (1967) 144-158.
44. Gregor Maurach, 'Der Pfeilschuss des Ascanius. Zum 9 Buch der Aeneis', Gymnasium 75 (1968) 355-370.
45. Joseph Fontenrose, 'The Gods invoked in Epic Oaths: Aeneid XII, 175-215', AJP 89 (1968) 20-38.
46. Raymond Bloch, 'À propos de l'Énéide de Virgile: Réflexions et perspectives', REL 45 (1967) 325-342.
47. C. Grier Davis, 'The Motif of the Hunt in Vergil's Aeneid', Landmarks in Western Culture: commentaries and controversies, Donald N. Baker and George W. Fasel (edd.) Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1968, 204-214.
48. O.A.W. Dilke, 'Do Line Totals in the Aeneid show a preoccupation with significant numbers?' CQ 17 (1967) 322-326.
49. G.E. Duckworth, 'The "Old" and the "New" in Vergil's Aeneid', The Poetic Tradition: Essays on Greek, Latin, and English Poetry. Don Cameron Allen and Henry T. Rowell (edd.), (Baltimore, 1968), 63-80.
50. Roger Hornsby, 'Pastor in the poetry of Vergil', CJ 63 (1967-8) 145-152.
51. Roger Hornsby, 'The Armor of the Slain', Philological Quarterly, 45 (1966) 347-359.
52. A.M. Knight, 'Humor in Virgil's Aeneid', Some Papers Presented to the Classics Sections of the Twentieth University of Kentucky Foreign Languages Conference, Lexington, Ky., 1967.
53. A.S. McDevitt, 'Hysteron Proteron in the Aeneid', CQ 17 (1967) 316-21.
54. Henning Morland, 'Die Carmina des Horaz in der Aeneis', Symb. Osl. 42 (1968) 102-112.
55. William R. Nethercut, 'Invasion in the Aeneid', G&R 15 (1968) 82-95.
56. Jacques Perret, 'Optimisme et tragédie dans l'Énéide', REL 45 (1967) 342-62.

57. Kenneth Quinn, Virgil's Aeneid, a critical description. Ann Arbor, Michigan, 1968.
58. Kenneth Rexroth, 'The "Aeneid" .', Saturday Review (September 21, 1968)' 55-6.
59. Francis A. Sullivan S.J., 'Tendere manus: gestures in the Aeneid' CJ 63 (1968) 358-62.
60. R.D. Williams, 'Theme and Mood in the Aeneid' BICS 14 (1967) 110-111.
61. R.D. Williams, 'The Purpose of the Aeneid', Antichthon 1 (1967) 29-41.
62. Mario A. Di Cesare. A Critical Study Guide to Vergil's Aeneid ('Key Guides', PQ 152). Philadelphia, Penna., 1968.
63. R. Gilg-Ludwig, 'Die göttliche Widersacherin (Juno bei Ovid, Vergil, Seneca)', Helikon 6 (1966) 425-441.
64. T.J. Haarhoff, 'Vergil and the Pre-Greek Gods.', PVS 6 (1966-7) 49-50.
65. G. Lieberg, 'La Dea Giunone nell'Eneide di Virgilio', Atene e Roma 11 (1966) 145-65.
66. Antonie Wlosok. Die Göttin Venus in Vergils Aeneis. (Bibliothek der Klassischen Altertumswissenschaften, Neue Folge, 2. Reihe, 21). Heidelberg, 1967.
67. Ferdinando Castagnoli, 'I luoghi connessi con l'arrivo di Enea nel Lazio', Archaeologia Classica, 19 (1967) 235-47.
68. Ferdinando Castagnoli, 'Lavinium and the Aeneas Legend', Vergilius 13 (1967) 1-8.
69. Hans Kühner. Latium-Land im Schatten Roms. Geschichte, Gestalten, Gesichter. Köln, 1967.
70. Hans Jorg Schweizer. Vergil und Italian. Interpretationen zu den italischen Gestalten der Aeneis (Diss., Zurich, 1967). Aarau, 1967.
71. Robert F. Paget. In the Footsteps of Orpheus. Robert Hale, London, 1967.

72. Robert F. Paget, 'The Great Antrum at Baiae', Vergilius 13 (1967) 42-50.

The epic claimed the lion's share of scholarship during the past year. Klingner's text (25) is welcome and reliable. Quinn (26) treats Aeneid 1, 755-6 and 5, 626 and suggests that the wanderings of Aeneas occupied five years by our reckoning. After the Greek departure in the spring and the city's collapse in the early summer, the departure of the refugees came, in Quinn's view, one year later, at the start of the following summer. Speranza's (27) annotated text is conservative and unimportant. Tracy (28) examines some of the ramifications of the Helenus episode. Aeneid 4 has engaged the attention of several scholars with the major emphasis on Dido, her predicament and her defense. The new availability of Pease's (31) marvelously pedantic and authoritative commentary is most welcome, and school and college classrooms will also applaud Bertha Tilly's (35) serviceable and generally attractive addition to the 'Palatine Classics'. However, students who are introduced to Vergil through Bertha Tilly's text will hardly appreciate the impact of recent and diverse scholarship on the best-loved book. Pearce (34) argues for the meaning 'kindly' in his interpretation of placidus viri deus obstruit auris (440). Koch's study (36) emphasizes parallelisms in theme and imaginative language in the first four books of the Aeneid. Galinsky (37) attacks the 'superfluous' approach to the Fifth Aeneid and argues for its central role in the epic. He detects an Aeneid in parvo in the maligned book, and believes that it was composed concomitantly with the rest of the epic. The boxing-match between Dares and Entellus was, in his view, affected by scenes in Aeneid 12, and is another indication that the book was finished late, near the end of the Aeneid's composition. Eichholz (40) detects a chronological scheme in the composition of the shield's subject matter, scenes which were creditable to Rome and flattering to Roman pride. Dynamic rather than thematic structure explains the rationale of the content. The Golden Bough causes Koch (41) to make a botanical examination of 'classic' mistletoe, and Segal (42) to engage with a symbolical interpretation of the 'delaying' action of the talisman. Segal interprets the hesitation as a symbolical anticipation of the rude loss of innocence which awaits the peaceful forest of Italy — attacked so purposefully and sacrilegiously by Agrippa on the slopes of Avernus. Segal finds the bough's effort to retain its integrity as comparable to the forced acquiescence of Saturnian Italy and Saturnian Juno to the dictates of Jupiter and the security of the Trojan destiny. Maurach's study (44) of Ascanius' archery and his role in Aeneid 9 explores Homeric and Hellenistic analogies in determining the meaning and the proper function of Ascanius-Julus. Fontenrose's polemic (45) casts much fresh light on the formalities and implications of Vergilian oaths at critical junctures in the action. Raymond Bloch (46) examines the implications of Servius ad Aen 5, 422 (an allusion to Etruscan triadic design in temple architecture), the equation of Juno with Astarte (the Tanit of Carthage) in Aeneid 1, 441f., with sidelights on the Pyrgi gold plate inscriptions, and finally the Thracian sacrifice (Aeneid 3, 18ff) and the awful manifestation of Polydorus' murder.

Davis (47) charges that the hunt theme reveals that the epic was no simple paean to Imperial Rome but 'Vergil's personal commentary on the costs of empire, paid by victors and victims'. Dilke (48) detects some of the simpler numerical elements (3, 7, 12, and 30) in the poem and investigates whether they were deliberate insertions or not. His article is a timely relief for those who favour structural analysis over complicated mathematics. Duckworth (49) offers a detailed discussion of the structure of the epic, basic themes, and similarities and contrasts. Inter alia Duckworth treats the Evander episode and its valuable effect on the latter part of the Aeneid, and provides in passing some good remarks on Rome's topography and the shield (78-80). Hornsby (50) explores the recurrent figure of the 'shepherd' in Vergil's works, from the knowledgeable pastor of the Eclogues, to the 'shepherd of the people' in the epic. Hornsby (51) also examines the recurrent pattern of the wearing of spoils and its disastrous consequences throughout the epic. Each episode is examined in the context of its book with critical discussion of the suggestive nature of the pattern which culminates in Turnus' death. McDevitt (53) concludes that hysteron proteron does not exist in the epic as a linguistic trick or ornament; the reversal of clauses is deliberately designed to provide a particular poetic effect. Morland's article (54) on the influence of Horace's Odes on the Aeneid indicates that further work remains to be done along comparable lines. Nethercut (55) notes a latent tendency in the Trojans to furor and aggrandisement and so an identification with the nature of the Greek invaders of Troy. Kenneth Quinn's (57) long awaited study of the Aeneid is a masterly subjective critical description which deserves to be on every reference shelf. It will excite much argument and probably adverse comment for its fresh and contentious approach to hallowed areas of 'scholarship sublime', but will be enlightening to most and a fine support to the growing appreciation of Roman literature in general. Rexroth's (58) pithy remarks on the Aeneid assess the epic as an anti-heroic poem wherein the civil conscience argues against heroic virtue in the shape of a counter-Odyssey. Outstretched hands provide a common gesture in the Aeneid, and Sullivan's (59) systematic review of gestures to gods and humans emphasizes the persuasive and expressive potency of the gesture. Williams (61) uncovers a private and public voice in Vergil, the former intense, sympathetic and pitying, the other concerned with pacific behavior and the civilizing mission of Roman imperialism. But the divorce from real life, the mythological aspects of the epic, inspired by literature, art, dreams and Homer, constitutes the most genuine expression of the poet. The role of the gods has been freshly examined by several scholars usually with the conclusion that the Italian conceptions of divinity are the most appealing and affecting to the poet. Wlosok's study (66) is a systematic detailed assessment of Aeneid 1, 223-304, 305-417, and Aeneid 8, 608-728, with 520-40. Castagnoli's archaeological quests into Aeneas' Latium continue to yield valuable illustration and confirmation of the Vergilian allusions. Both articles (67, 68) deal with the sanctuary zone at Lavinium, the 13 altars, consecrated perhaps to the Penates, the problems connected with Troia, the Lucus Solis Indigetis, and the river Numicus. Schweizer (70) casts valuable light on Italic elements in the epic and the poet's overriding concern and sympathy for the Italian components of the united peninsula. Paget's (71, 72) explorations at Baiae and in the environs of Cumae give every promise of awakening new interest in Campanian archaeology particularly in the critical areas of Cumae's suzerainty and influence. His discovery of a complex of tunnels at Baiae, equated with an Oracle of the Dead, perhaps prematurely, has caused Vergilian scholars to review the descensus Averno with new curiosity. The tunnels and the terminal chamber, the 6th century Greek temple at the point of entry, and the careful provision for light and easy access along the lengthy descent, suggest that the tunnels were designed for some ritual purpose, perhaps initiation, long before Rome's advent. Agrippa's depredations at Cumae and Avernus may have extended to Baiae as well for the complex was evidently blocked during the period 50-25 B.C. either as a consequence of volcanic action or because of discrimination against a venerable cult.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA, VITAE, ETC.

73. Sister M. Borromeo, O.S.U., 'The Value of the Virgilian Appendix', Some Papers Presented to the Classics Sections of the Twentieth University of Kentucky Foreign Languages Conference, Lexington, Kentucky, 1967.
74. G. Brugnoli, 'Magus e Figulus', Maia 19 (1967) 387-8.
75. E. Courtney, 'Some Emendations to the Appendix Vergiliana', Phoenix 21 (1967) 44.
76. R.J. Dickinson, 'Some Emendations in the Aetna', PACA 9 (1966) 77-80.
77. G.E. Duckworth, 'Studies in Latin Hexameter Poetry', TAPA 97 (1966) 67-113, especially 86-101.
78. P.T. Eden, 'Adnotatiunculæ in Appendicem Vergilianam', Mnemos., 20 (1967) 285-92.

The Appendix continues to excite scholarly emendations and resolute comment. Duckworth's study yields fresh encouragement to the continuation of research and study in the Appendix. His lengthy article (77) argues that the Culex and Moretum are probably youthful works, that the Ciris and Dirae, one poem not two, are not Vergilian, and that the Aetna was probably written ca. 25-50 A.D.

GENERAL STUDIES, TRANSLATIONS, CLASSICAL TRADITION, BIBLIOGRAPHY

79. J. Bayet, 'L'expérience sociale de Virgile', Mélanges de littérature latine, (Paris, 1966) 281-302.

80. H.W. Benario, 'Vergil and Tacitus', CJ 63 (1967-8) 24-27.
81. Janet P. Bews. Vergil and Tacitus: an examination of the nature and significance of Vergil's influence upon the language and themes of the Annales (Diss. London) BICS 14 (1967).
82. J.P. Brisson. Virgile: son temps et le notre. Paris, 1966.
83. Alan Cameron, 'Echoes of Vergil in St. Jerome's Life of St. Hilarion', CP 63 (1968) 55-6.
84. Wendell Clausen, 'Adnotatiunculae in Servium', HSCP 71 (1967).
85. Mario L. D'Avanzo, 'Keats' and Vergil's underworlds: source and meaning in Book II of Endymion, Keats-Shelley Journal 16 (1967) 61-72.
86. Josef Delz, 'Neuere Literatur zu Vergils Aeneis' Mus. Helv. 25 (1968) 57-62.
87. Fifty Years (and Twelve) of Classical Scholarship: Being Fifty Years of Classical Scholarship Revised with Appendices. Oxford, 1968.
88. E. Fraenkel. Kleine Beitrage zur Klassischen Philologie. Zwei Bande. Rome, 1964. II s.v. Vergil, 139-44; 145-72; 173-180; 181-98.
89. N.A. Greenberg, 'Breakdown', Computers and the Humanities, Vol. 2 (November, 1967).
90. A. Hudson-Williams, 'Virgil and the Christian Latin Poets', PVS 6 (1966-7) 11-21.
91. H.H. Huxley, 'Ovid's Debt to Virgil', Canisius College Language Methods Newsletter 5:1 (1967) 1-15.
92. D.H. Jocelyn, The Tragedies of Ennius. Cambridge, 1967, 202-3, 354,
93. D.A.S. John and A.F. Turberfield. Virgil: The Voyage of Aeneas, translated with introduction and notes, maps, and an index. London, 1968.
94. L.L. Johnson. Vergil, The Aeneid. A Verse translation in 14-line-Spenserian Stanzas and complex rhyme. Lerwick, Shetland, 1967.

95. D. Joly, 'Juvénal et les Géorgiques' Hommages a Jean Bayet (edd. M. Renard, R. Schilling), Collection Latomus 70. Brussels, 1964. 290-308.
96. C.W. Lockyer, Jr., 'Horace's Propempticon and Vergil's Voyage (Odes I, 3)' CW 61 (1967) 42-5.
97. M.P.O. Morford, The Poet Lucan: Studies in Rhetorical Epic. New York, 1967.
98. K.J. Nauman, Augustus and the New Poetry. Collection Latomus, 88. Brussels, 1967.
99. J.K. Newman, The Concept of Vates in Augustan Poetry. Collection Latomus, 89. Brussels, 1967.
100. Hans Oppermann, Wege zu Vergil. Darmstadt, 1963 (1966).
101. R.G. Peterson, 'Larger manners and events: Sallust and Virgil in Absolom and Achitophel', PMLA 82:2 (May, 1967) 236-44.
102. E.K. Rand, The Magical Art of Virgil. Cambridge, 1931; reprint, Archon Press, London, 1966.
103. L. Rubio, 'La lengua estilística de Virgilio', Revista de estudios clásicos 10 (1966) 355-75.
104. R.V. Schoder, S.J., 'On Two Portraits of Vergil', Vergilius 13 (1967) 9-15.
105. A. Setaioli, 'Esegesi vergiliana in Seneca', Stud. It. 37 (1965) 133-56.
106. Donald C. Swanson, The Names in Roman Verse. Madison/Milwaukee, 1967.
107. Lawrence S. Thompson, A bibliography of American doctoral dissertations in classical studies and related fields. Hamden, Conn., 1968.
108. Lynette E. Thompson and R.T. Bruère, 'Lucan's Use of Virgilian Reminiscence', CP 63 (1968) 1-21.
109. S. Timpanaro, 'Note e interpreti virgiliani antichi', Riv. Fil. 95 (1967) 428-445.

110. R.D. Williams, 'Servius — Commentator and Guide', PVS 6 (1966-7) 50-56.

Benario (80) has examined the affinity of Tacitus for Vergil, regarding the historian as bard of Vergil's dream perverted, and Miss Bews (81) has concentrated at greater length on the nature and significance of Vergilian influence on the language and themes of the Annals. Brisson (82) is concerned with Vergil's life and offers specific dates which will appeal to some, not to others: e.g., 53-50 B.C., Vergil at Rome attending the school of Epidius; 49 B.C., at Naples, with Siro; October, 45 B.C., return to Mantua; 43-41 B.C., composed Eclogues 2,3,5,7, at Mantua; 38 B.C., Vergil established in Campania (Georgic 1); 37 B.C., Eclogue 10 and publication of the bucolic collection. Vergil's literary influence on authors other than Tacitus has attracted several scholars, always with profit to the strait-jacketed Latinist (83, 85, 90, 91, 95, 97, 101, 108). D'Avanzo (85) argues that Keats' first descent of Endymion (Book 2) owes largely to Aeneid 6; Endymion's model is Aeneas and his descent follows Aeneas' pattern very closely. Hudson-Williams (90) finds Vergilian influence in the poetry of the late Latin period, the 4th and 5th centuries particularly. Lucan's indebtedness to Vergil is carefully reviewed by Thompson and Bruère (108) and more imaginatively though incompletely by Morford (97). Juvenal's debt to Vergil has been partially explored by Joly (95) but much remains to be done. The reprint of the Platnauer Fifty Years of Classical Scholarship is disappointing in a number of respects, not least in the failure to up-date Catullus and The Augustan Poets. Jocelyn's (92) study of Ennius' tragedies involves Vergil's use of Alexander and Medea. The reprint of E.K. Rand's Magical Art of Virgil (102) is enterprising and gratifying. Two collections of importance to the overall study of Vergil are Swanson's word list (106) and Thompson's bibliography of American Ph.D. dissertations (107). Schoder's (104) assessment of the portraiture of Vergil is perceptive but incomplete since it lacks Gisela Richter's recently identified versions which are totally different from the Villa Medici relief type and the Bardo mosaic. Williams, with customary insight, lauds Servius' commentary as a monumental work of enormous erudition (on the whole) and solid common sense. Imaginative insights and sensitive literary criticism are not ingredients of his encyclopedic antiquarian commentary.

McMaster University
October 1, 1968.

A.G. McKay