

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1968-69

Author(s): A. G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1969, No. 15 (1969), pp. 42-52

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41592268>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1968-69

INTRODUCTION

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the seventh in the Vergilius series. Previous reviews may be found in Numbers 9 (1963) 33–6; 10 (1964) 40–44; 11 (1965) 40–47; 12 (1966); 39–45; 13 (1967) 35–41; and 14 (1968) 16–27. Viktor Pöschl's survey, already launched in Anzeiger für Altertumswissenschaft 21:4 (1968), deals with General Studies, Appendix Vergiliana, Eclogues, and Georgics; his conspectus includes important publications that have appeared since his earlier survey in Anzeiger 12, (1959) 193–218. R.D. Williams' recent survey in the exemplary 'New Surveys in the Classics', published by Greece and Rome, deals critically and eloquently with the most important modern studies of Vergil's works. The titanic Bibliographical Surveys by George E. Duckworth (CW, 51 (1958), and CW, 57 (1963–4) 193–228, both reprinted by the Vergilian Society in 1964, dealt with work on Vergil from 1940–56 and from 1957–63. The forthcoming Classical World survey is being prepared by the present writer and will deal with works published between 1963 and 1969.

ECLOGUES

1. Bernard F. Dick, 'Ancient Pastoral and the pathetic fallacy', Comparative Lit. 20:1 (1968) 27–44.
2. David Kinzler, 'Vergil, Eclogue IV. 61', CW 64 (1968) 130–131.
3. H.H. Huxley, 'Vergil's Defective Meter? Eclogue IV. 61', CJ 64 (1968) 280.
4. B. Baldwin, 'Vergil, Eclogue IV. 61: A Reply', CJ 64 (1969) 280.
5. Robert Coleman, 'Pastoral Poetry', Greek and Latin Literature: A Comparative Study (ed. John Higginbotham), London, 1969, 100–123 (esp. 116ff).
6. Eleanor W. Leach, 'The Unity of Eclogue 6', Latomus 27 (1968) 13ff.
7. Peter Levi, S.J., 'Arcadia', PVS 7 (1967–8) 1–11.
8. W.R. Nethercut, 'Vergil and Horace in Bucolic 7', CW 62 (1968) 93–98.
9. J.B. Van Sickle, 'The Unity of the Eclogues: Arcadian Forest, Theocritean Trees', TAPA 98 (1967) 491–508.
10. Otto Skutsch, 'Symmetry and Sense in the Eclogues', HSCP 73 (1969) 153–170.
11. P. Steinmetz, 'Eclogen Vergils als dramatische Dichtungen', Antike und Abendland 14 (1968) 115–25.
12. Kenneth Wellesley, 'Virgil's Araxes. Ecl. 1. 61–66', CP 63 (1968) 139–41.
13. R.D. Williams, 'The Eclogues (42–37 B.C.)', Virgil, Greece and Rome: New Surveys in the Classics No. 1, (Oxford, 1967), 6–13.

14. D.E.W. Wormell, 'The Originality of the Eclogues', Virgil: "Studies in Latin Literature and its Influence", ed. D.R. Dudley, London, 1969, 1–26.

Scholars continue to evidence fresh enthusiasm and imaginative insights in their study of the pastoral poems. Bernard Dick's article concentrates on Vergil's use of the pathetic fallacy in the Eclogues, especially in Eclogue 10, and provides valuable comments on this symbolic way of viewing reality. Kinzler (2) argues in favour of the future perfect ('tulerint') but was challenged and routed by Huxley (3) and Baldwin (4) on metrical grounds. Coleman (5) explores new aspects and new dimensions in Vergilian pastoral in comparison with earlier writers. Eleanor Leach (6) finds careful balanced construction in Eclogue 6, and Levi's lecture (7) is a masterly compression of useful comments on Arcadia. Nethercut (8) attempts to corroborate Savage's earlier suggestion (TAPA, 94 (1963) 248–67) that Thyrsis in Eclogue 7 may be Horace. Van Sickle (9) reformulates three familiar problems into one: the unity of the Liber Bucolicorum, the origin of Arcadian poetry, and the Vergilian imitation of Theocritus. Van Sickle's paper deserves close attention and expansion. Skutsch's study of symmetry and sense (10) is a masterly account of a basic principle. Steinmetz (11) revives the dramatic aspects with skill and suasion. Wellesley (12) corroborates the text. Williams (13) and Wormell (14) comment on style, allusions, and originality.

GEORGICS

15. Alister Cox, 'Didactic Poetry', op. cit. (5), 124–61 (esp. 145ff).
16. Francisco Demetrio, S.J., 'Symbols in comparative religion and the Georgics (Logos 3)', Manila, Philippines, Ateneo Univ. Publics., 1968.
17. J. Gwyn Griffiths, 'Luna and Ceres (Georg. 1. 5–9)', CP 63 (1968) 143–5.
18. W. Liebeschuetz, 'The Cycle of Growth and Decay in Lucretius and Virgil', PVS 7 (1967–8) 30–40.
19. E. Maróti, 'Zur Entstehung von Vergils Georgica', Acta classica Universitatis Scientiarum Debreceniensis 1 (1965) 25–31.
20. A. Sidgwick, (ed.) P. Vergili Maronis Georgicon Liber IV, with English notes ("Cambridge Elementary Classics"), Cambridge, 1967.
21. K.D. White, 'Virgil's Knowledge of Arable Farming', PVS 7 (1967–8) 11–22.
22. R.D. Williams, 'The Georgics (36–29 B.C.)' op. cit. (13) (1967) 14–22.

Vergil's didactic poems are treated concisely and suggestively by Alister Cox (15) who also provides fresh urgency to the value of Wilkinson's forthcoming major study of the Georgics, the first comprehensive treatment in English of a new poetic genre, the 'descriptive poem'. Wilkinson's emphasis will challenge Otis' views, and some may prefer

Williams' compromise or synthesis (22). Griffiths (17) finds support for the identification of Luna and Ceres in Vergil (cf. R.J. Getty, Norwood Studies (Toronto, 1952) 172–183). Liebeschuetz's article (18) provides an outline of Lucretius' treatment of the cycle of growth and decline in organic and inorganic nature, and shows how Lucretius' handling of the theme influenced Vergil in the Georgics. White's authoritative lecture (21) considers passages on ploughing, second ploughing ('iteratio'), harrowing, burning the stubble, and testing soils for quality.

AENEID

23. A.J. Dunston, 'Aeneid I and IV: The Artistry of the Prologue and of the Tragedy', ARTS, Journal of the Sydney University Arts Association, (Michaelmas Term, 1967) 22–35.
24. J.R. Dunkle, 'Some Historical Symbolism in Book Three of the Aeneid', CW 62 (1969) 165–166.
25. A. Schmitz, 'Quelques aspects du personnage de Didon chez Virgile.' Conférences de la Société d'Études Latines de Bruxelles 1965–66 ("Collection Latomus", 92), Bruxelles: Latomus - Revue d'Études Latines, 1968.
26. H. Akbar Khan, 'Dido and the Sword of Aeneas', CP 63 (1968) 283–5.
27. D.B. Gregor, 'Virgil, Aeneid iv, 483', CR 19 (1969) 143.
28. G. Stégen, 'Des régates dans l'Énéide (Virg., Aen. V, 151–243) Latomus 27 (1968) 600ff.
29. W.A. Camps, 'The Role of the Sixth Book in the Aeneid', PVS 7 (1967–8) 22–30.
30. Francois Duysinx, 'Revenons au vestibule des Enfers (Virgile, Énéide vi, 273–94)', Otia 16: 1 (1969) (=Assoc. des classiques de l'Université de Liège).
31. A. Setaioli, 'Noviens Styx interfusa', Atene e Roma 14 (1969) 9–20.
32. W.F. Jackson-Knight, 'Virgil's Elysium', op. cit. (14) 161–175.
33. Stephane Krésic, 'Le Rameau d'or chez Virgile', Classical News and Views (publ. by Class. Assoc. of Canada) 12:3 (1968) 92–102.
34. E. Smith, 'Latinus and the climax of Aeneid 7', CB 44 (1968) 85–87.
35. Rhona Beare, 'Propiusque Periclo It Timor: Aeneid 8, 556–7', CQ 19 (1969) 193–5.
36. J.G. Griffith, 'Again the Shield of Aeneas (Aeneid VIII, 625–731)', PVS 7 (1967–8) 54–65.

37. R.J. Rowland, 'Foreshadowing in Vergil, Aeneid VIII, 714–28', Latomus 27 (1968) 832–842.
38. R.D. Williams, 'Virgil, Aen. 9, 25–32', CP 63 (1968) 148.
39. H.W. Benario, 'The Tenth Book of the Aeneid', TAPA 98 (1967) 23–36.
40. Giovanni Polava, 'Servio Ad Aen. xi, 33 e il significato della parola alumnus', Annali della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia (Univ. di Napoli) 11 (1964–68) 69–107.
41. John Ferguson, 'Book XII Revisited', PVS 7 (1967–8) 66–77.
42. R.G. Austin, 'Ille ego qui quondam', CQ 18 (1968) 107–115.
43. D.E. Eichholz, 'Symbol and Contrast in the Aeneid', G&R 15 (1968) 105–112.
44. G.B.A. Fletcher, 'Notes on Virgil, Eclogues, Georgics, and Aeneid I to V' Latomus 27 (1968) 165ff.
45. Kristine Gilmartin, 'Hercules in the Aeneid', Vergilius 14 (1968) 41–47.
46. U. Hübner, Elegisches in der Aeneis. Diss. Giessen, 1968.
47. Egil Kraggerud, Aeneisstudien (Symbolae Osloenses, Fasc. Supplet. 22). Oslo, 1966 (=1968).
48. Henning Mørland, 'Horaz', 'Vergil', und andere Gestalten in der Aeneis, Symbolae Osloenses 43 (1968) 57–68.
49. Brooks Otis, 'The Originality of the Aeneid', op. cit. (14) 27–66.
50. Meyer Reinhold, 'The Unhero Aeneas', Class. et Mediaev. 27 (1966) 195–207.
51. H.L. Tracy, 'Vergil and the Nostoi', Vergilius 14 (1968) 36–40.
52. Th. Wiesner, 'Buskined Maro: Tragic elements in the Aeneis', CB 44 (1968) 65–9.
53. R.D. Williams, 'The Aeneid (30–19 B.C.)' op. cit. (13) 23–44.
54. John R. Wilson, 'Action and Emotion in Aeneas', G&R 16 (1969) 67–75.

Otis, Knauer, Klingner, and Quinn still dominate the present scene with their mutually exclusive treatments of Vergil's works. Otis (CJ 64 (1969) 371–4) salutes Quinn's success with structure, form and technique, and style but also expresses the hope that 'someone like R. D. Williams will assimilate all of us into the Virgilian tradition'. Recent studies in smaller compass all bear the impress of the modern Vergilian quadriga. Dunstan's paper (23) specifies foreshadowings of the tragedy of Dido and Aeneas in Book 1, and indicates how points and ideas are resumed and developed in Book 4. Dunkle (24) finds that the oft-reiterated weariness in Book 3 is symbolic of war's exhaustion, whereas rest is a symbol of peace after the political and military convulsions of the past. Eternal Dido continues to inspire new studies of her nature and predicament. Khan's article (26) discusses the aesthetic possibilities of the sword motif and Ovid's use of the sword as a vehicle of pathos at the climax of the queen's appeals in Heroides 7. Camps' lecture (29) is a challenge to complacency about the role of Aeneid 6. Duysinx (30) answers Guillaume Stégen (Otia 15:2 (1967) 75f) in his study of the substance and plan of the verses assigned to the vestibule of Hades. Setaioli (31) examines Georgics 4, 479–80 and Aeneid 6, 438–9 in exhaustive detail and admits to ignorance at the close though he suggests that there may be Orphic associations in the meander pattern of the Styx. Jackson Knight's posthumous chapter (32) explores Vergil's two systems of belief about life and death, one Platonic (Aeneid 6), the other Homeric – the traditional dichotomy between the religious and the psychic, the church and the free prophet, the institutional and the spiritual. Vergil characteristically includes both strains with respect for both. Kresic's article (33) examines the status quaestionis of the Golden Bough and offers critical elucidation of the different solutions of the problem. Rhona Beare (35) argues that the women's fear is moving from Pallanteum towards the danger. Griffith (36) gives a synoptic view of Aeneid 6, 756f and Aeneid 8, 630f, with references to Livy where appropriate. Rowland's study in foreshadowing (37) treats the concept of the Golden Age with its attendant suggestion of imminent or ultimate disaster. The pageant of Rome's future on Aeneas' shield, in Rowland's view, is less triumphant than foreboding. Prosperity and success may be harbingers of degeneracy and ultimate destruction. Williams (38) interprets 'altus' (line 30) as the participle of 'alo' and translates 'like the Ganges silently rising, fed by its seven placid tributaries'. Benario (39) examines characterization in Aeneid 10 and highlights Lausus and especially Mezentius who foresaw more than Turnus and is associated with adjectives of knowledge and ignorance (843, 907). Ferguson's lecture (41) discusses Epicurean tension, rare usages, ambiguity, shape, sound and sense, and glory in Aeneid 12. Austin (42) discards 'Ille ego qui quondam' as unauthentic without decent manuscript authority, and as bristling with problems in style and expression. Eichholz (43) offers interesting and fresh comments on symbol and contrast in the epic, and Fletcher (44) is most perceptive in his notes on Aeneid 1–5. Kristine Gilmartin (45) finds that Hercules is not a positive model for Aeneas, but rather an instructive contrast who serves nevertheless to demonstrate the humanity characteristic of Aeneas. Kraggerud (47) is concerned with the gradual development of Aeneas' character, his positive relation to Fate (the even books), and his negative doubting attitude to Jupiter's will (the odd books). Mørland (48) offers some challenging interpretations of meaningful names and poetic associations in the epic. Otis' chapter (49) argues that the Aeneid was meant to be a complete Iliad-Odyssey and so unique. Greek models are employed not for imitation but for creative transformation. Reinhold (50) recalls that the transcendent image of Aeneas was not universal. There were non-idealized versions wherein the hero was portrayed as less heroic and inglorious. The favorable and the pejorative aspects ran parallel in Classical times and during the Middle Ages. Tracy (51) finds that the sequence of incidents and the series of harassments and obstructions in Aeneas' wanderings recall the tradition of Phemius' 'painful returns', the old tales of Homecomings. Williams (53) in brief compass offers a thoughtful and illuminating review of recent researches into the Aeneid and further evidences his own fine instincts in the criticism of the epic. Wilson (54) rejects the revived view of Vergil as anti-Augustan, but is duly critical of Aeneas as an ineffectual sentimentalist who nevertheless comes as ravager of the pristine Italic world.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA, SERVIUS

55. E. Courtney, 'Catalepton 3. 9–10', CR 19 (1969) 15.
56. R. Doebelin, rev. W.V. Clausen, F.R.D. Goodyear, E.J. Kenney, J.A. Richmond, Appendix Vergiliana (Oxford, 1966), CP 63 (1968) 247–51.
57. R. Führer, 'Nuove cure per l'appendix Vergiliana', Maia 20 (1968) 390–5.
58. C.E. Murgia, 'Critical Notes on the Text of Servius' Commentary on Aeneid III–V', HSCP 72 (1967) 311–50.
59. O. Skutsch, 'Culex 59', HSCP 72 (1967) 309–10.
60. E. Wistrand, 'On the Problem of Catalepton 3', Arctos: Acta Philologica Fennica. Nova Series 5 (1967) 169–175.

The Oxford text of the Appendix Vergiliana (1966) has helped to revive interest in these problematic poems. Doebelin's review (56) is useful and incisive. Courtney (54) changes 'hora' to 'icta' ('overthrown'), and Wistrand (60) emphasizes the dilemmas attaching to the Third Catalepton. Murgia's critical notes (58) are invaluable to the student of Aeneid 3–5.

GENERAL STUDIES, TRANSLATIONS, CLASSICAL TRADITION, ARCHAEOLOGY

61. David Armstrong, 'The Other Aeneid', Arion 6.2 (1967) 143–168.
62. Michael Ayrton, 'The Path to Daedalus', op. cit. (14), 176–201, with 14 plates.
63. J.H. Betts, 'Classical Allusions in Shakespeare's Henry V with special reference to Virgil', G&R 15 (1968) 147–163.
64. N. Carini, 'Virgilio nell'opera filologica di Giacomo Leopardi', Latomus 27 (1968) 490ff.
65. Alfred M. Chapman (tr.) Vergil's Eclogues. (Ardmore, Penna, 1969).
66. J. Christern, 'Der "Jupiter tempel" in Cumae und seine umwandlung in eine Kirche', MDAI (Röm. Mitteil.) 73–4 (1966–7) 232–241.

67. N.E. Collinge, 'Ambiguity in Literature: Some Guidelines', Arethusa 2 (1969) 13–29.
68. F.R. Dale, 'A Note on the Trochaic Caesura in the Third Foot', PVS 7 (1967–8) 53–54.
69. George Doig, 'Vergil's Art and the Greek Language', CJ 64 (1968) 1–6.
70. G.E. Duckworth, 'Five Centuries of Latin Hexameter Poetry: Silver Age and Late Empire', TAPA 98 (1967) 77–150.
71. G.E. Duckworth, 'A Rare Type of First Foot Dactyl (Three Words)', AJP 89 (1968) 437–48.
72. G.E. Duckworth, 'Maphaeus Vegius and Vergil's Aeneid: A Metrical Comparison', CP 64 (1969) 1–6.
73. Donald C. Earl, The Moral and Political Tradition of Rome, ('Aspects of Greek and Roman Life'), Ithaca, 1967.
74. Donald C. Earl, The Age of Augustus, New York, 1968.
75. H.G. Edinger, 'Paulo Maiora Canamus', Vergilius 14 (1968) 28–35.
76. Howard Felperin, 'Aeneid II, 506–558', The Yale Review 58 (1968) 263–4.
77. M. Feo, 'Dal pius agricola al villano impio e bestiale (2a parte)', Maia 20 (1968) 206–223.
78. L. Foucher, 'Les mosaïques tunisiennes et les oeuvres des poètes latins. (Virgile, Ovide, Stace)', Conférences de la Société d'Études Latines de Bruxelles, 1963–64, 1964–65. I. Brussels: Latomus, 1965–66.
79. Woldemar Görler, 'Vergilzitate in Ausonius' Mosella', Hermes 97 (1969) 94–114.
80. A.J. Gossage, 'Virgil and the Flavian Epic', op. cit. (14), 67–93.
81. G. Guadagno, 'C. Cornelius Gallus praefectus fabrum nelle nuove iscrizioni dell'obelisco vaticano', Opuscula Romana 6 (1968) 21–26.
82. T.J. Haarhoff, 'The Element of Propaganda in Vergil', Acta Classica 11 (1968) 125–38.
83. Tom Burns Haber, A Comparative Study of the Beowulf and the Aeneid, New York, Phaidon, 1968.
84. Harald Hagendahl. Augustine and the Latin Classics. Vol 1: Testimonia. Vol 2:

- Augustine's Attitude. Göteborg: Acta Universitatis, 1967.
85. T.W. Harrison, 'English Virgil: The Aeneid in the XVIII Century', Philologica pragensia 10:1 (1967) 1–11, and 10:2 (1967) 80–91.
 86. B.L. Hijmans, 'Robert Graves, The White Goddess and Vergil', Mosaic (Journal for the Comparative Study of Literature and Ideas, Univ. of Manitoba) 2:2 (1969) 58–73.
 87. Peter Howell, 'Postis', Philologus 112 (1968) 132–5.
 88. J.W. Mackail, Lectures on Poetry. ('Essay Index Reprint Series') Freeport, N. Y., 1967.
 89. A.G. McKay, 'Vergil and Vitruvius', Canisius College Language Methods Newsletter 5:3 (1968) 10–15.
 90. A.G. McKay, 'Virgilian Landscape into Art: Poussin, Claude and Turner', op. cit. (14) 139–60, with 6 plates.
 91. Martin Mühmelt, Griechische Grammatik in der Vergilerklärung. (Zetemata, 37) Munich, 1965.
 92. Brooks Otis, 'The Uniqueness of Latin Literature', Arion 6:2 (1967) 185–206.
 93. R.F. Paget, 'The Ancient Harbours at Cumae', Vergilius 14 (1968) 4–15.
 94. R.F. Paget, 'The Ancient Ports of Cumae', JRS 68 (1968) 152–169.
 95. T.E.V. Pearce, 'A Pattern of Word Order in Latin Poetry', CO 18 (1968) 334–354.
 96. J.R.T. Pollard, 'Something Odd about Virgil', PVS 7 (1967–8) 41–53.
 97. J.J.H. Savage, 'Variations on a Theme by Augustus', TAPA 97 (1966) 431–57.
 98. J.J.H. Savage, 'More Variations on a Theme by Augustus', TAPA 98 (1967) 415–30.
 99. H.C. Schnur, Vergil, Hirtengedichte (übers. u. erlaut.) 'Universalbibliothek' 637. Stuttgart (Reclam), 1968.
 100. Charles Segal, 'Ancient Texts and Modern Literary Criticism', Arethusa 1 (1968) 1–12.
 101. David Silhanek (tr.) Homer's Iliad and Vergil's Aeneid. Edited, new translations, and with introductions ('Laurel Leaf Library', 3975), New York, 1969.

102. Francis A. Sullivan, S.J., 'Virgil and the Mystery of Suffering', AJP 90 (1969) 161–70.
103. J.P. Sullivan, 'Philology and Literary Criticism at the Graduate Level', Arethusa 2 (1969) 1–12.
104. Raoul Verdière, 'La Bucolique post-virgilienne', Eos 56 (1966) 161–185.
105. K. Vretska, 'Gedanken über den jungen Vergil', Gestalt u. Wirklichkeit Festgabe f. Ferd. Weinhand (Berlin, 1967), 337–47.
106. J.H. Whitfield, 'Virgil into Dante', op. cit. (14) 94–118.
107. R.D. Williams, 'Changing Attitudes to Virgil', op. cit. (14) 119–138.
108. Gordon Williams. Tradition and Originality in Roman Poetry, Oxford, 1968. Armstrong's article (61) provides a careful assessment of recent interpretations of the epic. Michael Ayrton, the modern artist and sculptor (62), finds the sources of his inspiration for repeated versions of Daedalus, Icarus, Sibil, and Minotaur in the combined influence of Berlioz, the numinous quality of the acropolis of Cumae, and the encouragement of Jackson Knight. Betts (63) juxtaposes lines, images, and ideas used in common or in similar fashion by Shakespeare and Vergil. Chapman's translation (65), with notes, is catastrophic. Christern (66) examines the temple on the upper terrace of the Cumaean acropolis, originally Greek, plundered (no doubt) and rebuilt by Augustus, ultimately transformed into a Christian basilica. Collinge's remarks on ambiguity in literature (67) merit close reading by critics of Vergil. Dale (68) comments on trochaic caesura in the third foot, especially in Aeneid 6, 322–5, where it occurs in four consecutive lines. Doig (69) explores proper names and local epithets with Greek roots or associations and suggests that Vergil, with a proven interest in etymological associations, had wider possibilities in mind when he selected Greek words or words with Greek associations. Duckworth's article (70) on hexameter poetry puts Vergil into larger context. The same scholar's study of the first foot dactyl comprising three words (71) suggests that the higher frequency in the Georgics as opposed to the Aeneid may indicate Lucretian influence on the didactic poems, or as a corollary, a desire to find greater dignity and majesty for the epic by the reduction in the usage. Duckworth (72) also shows, in a metrical study of Maphaeus Vegius' Thirteenth Book of the Aeneid, published in 1428, that the Renaissance metric is basically dissimilar to that of Vergil. D.C. Earl (73) treats 'nobilitas', 'virtus' and 'gloria' as key words and concepts in both Vergil and Horace. For Turnus, 'virtus' is linked with 'gloria', and it is only in dealing with Turnus that the aristocratic concept of 'nobilitas' is mentioned; Earl's remarks would suggest that Turnus is the solitary Roman 'nobilis' in the epic. Sallust had alleged already that a man's 'virtutes' not his family-tree, should constitute the passport to 'gloria'. Turnus 'virtus' belongs to remoter peoples, rustic Italians, and early Romans, but his thirst for fame ('gloria') is reprehensible and as foreign to 'virtus' as is 'nobilitas'. Turnus is seemingly the embodiment of the 'nobiles', whose factional struggles for private ends and for the grand 'figura' impaired and finally destroyed the Republic. Earl's study of the Augustan Age (74) provides valuable asides on Vergil and the literary scene. Edinger's article (75) is concerned with assonance and its quantity in the Eclogues concentrating on the single syllable 'or'. Felperin (76) provides a verse translation of Aeneid 2, 506–558. Gossage (80) shows that Statius and Silius Italicus were much closer to Vergil than Valerius Flaccus. Silius' produced an anachronistic imitation; Statius' Thebaid is closest to the Vergilian spirit and poetic technique.

Guadagno (81) continues the discussion of the C. Cornelius Gallus inscription on the Vatican obelisk with reference to the poet's tragic death which had such dolorous implications for Vergil. Haarhoff (82) argues that in the material world Vergil supported Augustan policy from inner conviction as the best available. But Vergil was no instrument of Augustan propaganda for he looks down on him from a great spiritual height. Hagendahl's monumental study (84) reveals the marked influence of Cicero and of Vergil on Augustine, and of Sallust and Terence in lesser degree. Howell's article (87) on the meanings of postis explains Aeneid 2, 480 and 493: postes refers to the leaves which are torn off the pivot-pole (cardo) not just the sockets. Vergil also refers to one of the disadvantages of the Roman type of door (Aeneid 1, 449): the pivot-pole became stiff and groaned in its sockets. McKay's address (89) treats reflections of architecture and the fine arts in the Aeneid from the standpoint of technique and subject matter. Vergil's epic as pictorial composition is better appreciated when viewed in the tradition of Roman (and Hellenistic) art, historical, allegorical, and triumphal. Vergil has frequently been acknowledged as an expert among landscape painters who have used words instead of pigments. McKay's chapter (90) in the Dudley collection shows how Poussin, Claude, and Turner dealt with Vergilian landscape, each responsive and faithful in his peculiar fashion. The painter's often revealed a sureness of taste and judgment that overshadows the literary critics of their time and our own. Otis' article (92) on the unique quality of Roman literature includes Vergil in its purview. Paget's articles (93, 94) describe the Greek and Roman ports of Cumae, particularly the military harbour of Agrippa beneath the acropolis on the Tyrrhenian shoreline where the menace of Sextus Pompey was omnipresent after 40 B.C. Paget's naval experience served him well in locating the two lighthouses along the shore, traces of moles, and the line of a Roman canal from nearby Lake Fusaro (the ancient Acherusian Swamp) that supplied scouring water for the Roman port beneath the Grotto of the Sibyl. He has also determined the original design of the Portus Julius (Georgics 2, 161ff). Pollard's lecture (96) examines Vergil's ambivalent attitude in his most profound passages (Aeneid 1, 461; 8, 65; Georgics 1, 169f. Aeneid 3, 381f., Aeneid 6, 28f., etc. Savage (98) analyses Georgics 3, 563–66, and 4, 559–66, and suggests that Vergil's epitaph (Mantua me genuit, etc.) follows a pattern which may allude conceptually to the favorite maxim of Augustus – 'festina lente' (Suet. Aug. 25, 4). Segal (100) and Sullivan (103) both provide valuable observations and counsel in matters of modern literary criticism. Silhanek's prose version of the Aeneid (101) is heavily abridged and paired with an abridged Iliad for secondary school students. Sullivan (102) tries to show that suffering in Vergil always has a meaning, partly discernible in this life, wholly revealed in the after-life. Vergil sensed that great achievements are coupled with great suffering, that nobility of character needs testing in the fires of affliction, and that love inevitably involves sacrifice. Whitfield (106) argues that Vergil and Dante are in most things quite dissimilar both in statement and in poetic tone. Williams (107) explores attitudes to Vergil from Dryden to Tennyson, from the hard robust approach to the near sentimentality of the Victorians. Gordon Williams' egregious volume (108) treats, inter alia, Vergil's conception of the underworld, dislocations of word-order, the handling of political issues, linguistic inventions, mock-heroic treatment of animals, and the poet's power of literary visualization and expertise with similes.

ADDENDA

109. Sir Roger Mynors, Vergil. Oxford, 1969.

The new Oxford University Classical Text replaces Sir Arthur Hirtzel's edition with a revised text and the addition of an index nominum. The new apparatus criticus provides a fuller account of the indirect tradition and incorporates the evidence of ninth-century manuscripts.

110. W.A. Camps. An Introduction to Virgil's Aeneid. Oxford, 1969. The discussion of particular topics is designed to convey an overall impression of the epic. The book is available as a paperback and is highly recommended for study at all levels.

A. G. McKay

McMaster University
September 1, 1969