

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1969-70

Author(s): A.G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1970, No. 16 (1970), pp. 33-39

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41591648>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1969-70

INTRODUCTION

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the eighth in the Vergilius series. Previous reviews may be found in Numbers 9 (1963) 33-6; 10 (1964) 40-44; 11 (1965) 40-47; 12 (1966) 39-45; 13 (1967) 35-41; 14 (1968) 16-27; and 15 (1969) 42-52. Viktor Pöschl's survey appears in Anzeiger für de Altertumwissenschaft 21 (1968) 193-220, and 22 (1969) 1 ff. The forthcoming Classical World survey is being prepared by the present writer and deals with works published between 1963 and 1970.

ECLOGUES

1. A. Espinosa Alarcon, "Bucolismo y vida", Actas del III Congreso Español de Estudios Clásicos, Vol. I (Madrid, 1968) 327-33.
2. Ulrich Schindel, "Meliboeus Redux", Hermes 97 (1969) 472-89.
3. Wojcik Andrzej, "De Amore infelici in tribus eclogis Vergilianis II, VIII, X, descripto", Eos 58 (1969) 83-98.
4. W.R. Nethercut, "Menalcas' answer: the hyacinth in Bucolic 3, 106-107", CJ 65 (1970) 248-54.
5. Joseph Veremans, "Eléments symboliques dans la III^e Bucolique de Virgile (Essai d'interprétation)", Collection Latomus 104 (1969).
6. Ludwig Braun, "Adynata und versus intercalaris im Lied Damons (Vergil, Ecl. 8)", Philologus 113 (1969) 292-7.
7. Sebastian Posch, Beobachtungen zur Theokritnachwirkung bei Vergil ("Commentationes Aenipontanae", XIX) (Innsbruck/Munich, 1969).
8. Michael C.J. Putnam. Virgil's Pastoral Art: Studies in the Eclogues. (Princeton, 1970).
9. T.G. Rosenmeyer. The Green Cabinet: Theocritus and the European Pastoral Lyric (Berkeley, Calif., 1969).
10. Ernst A. Schmidt, "Hirtenhierarchie in der antiken Bukolik?" Philologus 113 (1969) 183-200.
11. J.B. Van Sickle, "The Fourth Pastoral Poems of Virgil and Theocritus", Atti. Arcadia. Accademia Letteraria Italiana (Rome, 1969).
12. J.B. Van Sickle, "Is Theocritus a Version of Pastoral?" MLN (Comparative Literature) 84 (1969) 942-6.

Two remarkable and partly complementary studies of Vergilian pastoral have appeared, both products of extraordinary critical sensitivity and encompassing diverse aspects of the poetic art. Rosenmeyer's study (9) ranges over the larger pastoral terrain, but with brilliant insights into the Vergilian form; Putnam's study (8) considers each Eclogue as a separate artistic work and concentrates on structure and vocabulary. Putnam redefines the poems as profoundly ethical, as vehicles for ideas and social comment. Schindel (2) detects Ulixes redux behind Meliboeus; Nethercut (4) and Veremans (5) are concerned with symbolism as guide to poetic unity in the Third Eclogue. Braun (6) deals with Eclogue 8, 27f., and 52-8. Theocritean elements in Vergilian pastorage engage Posch (7), Putnam (8), Rosenmeyer (9) and Van Sickle (11,12) and all advance the definition of 'influence' in significant fashion.

GEORGICS

13. John Martyn, "False Modesty in Vergil", Vergilius 15 (1969) 53-4.
14. Dorothea Wender, "Resurrection in the Fourth Georgic", AJP 90 (1969) 424-36.
15. A. Wankenne, "Aristée et Orphée dans les Géorgiques", LEC 38 (1970) 18-29.
16. L.P. Wilkinson. The "Georgics" of Virgil: A Critical Survey. (Cambridge, 1969).

Wilkinson's long awaited study (16) has exceeded expectations. Wilkinson regards the poems as vividly descriptive with pleasure as the ultimate objective, not didactic but entertainment. Wilkinson stresses the deep personal feeling and philosophical purpose, and detects the religious, political, and symbolic motifs which permeate the well wrought lines. His comprehensive study of the poem's Nachleben is exemplary. His chapter on "Poetic Approach and Art" is concerned with rhythm and diction, and provides a perceptive reading of the Aristaeus epyllion as dividend. Wilkinson is antipathetic to symbolic interpretations and to numerological theories. Martyn (13) treats Georgics I, 80-81 (parodied by Juvenal 3, 321-2) and Aen. 5, 353-8 in an entertaining fashion; Dorothea Wender (14) and Wankenne (15) offer concise and convincing interpretations of the Aristaeus-Orpheus episode.

AENEID

17. Hans Koch, "Mathematische symmetrische und rhythmische komposition im 1 Buch der Aeneis", Symb. Osl. 45 (1970) 74-112.
18. J.W. Jones, "The Trojan Horse: Timeo Danaos et dona ferentis", CJ 65 (1970) 241-7.
19. Sir James Mountford, "Tempo and Texture in Aeneid II", PVS 8 (1968-69) 26-37. (Lecture 91).
20. J. Brisson, "Carthage et le fatum: Reflexions sur un thème de l'Enéide", Hommages à Marcel Renard I (ed. Jacqueline Bibauw) Collection Latomus, 101 (Brussels, 1969).
21. L.J. Quintela Ferreiro, "Notas sobre el libro IV de la "Eneida", op. cit., (1), 350-9.
22. Gloria S. Duclos, "Dido as Triformis Diana", Vergilius 15 (1969) 33-41.
23. G. Sanderlin, "Point of View in Virgil's Fourth Aeneid", CW 63 (1969) 81-5.
24. F.L.D. Stell, L.A. Moritz, "Infixum stridit sub pectore vulnus (Aen. IV, 689)" PVS 8 (1968-69) 49-51.
25. L.A. Thompson, John Ferguson. Africa in Classical Antiquity, (Ibadan, 1969).
26. A. Wankenne, S.J., "La part des dieux dans le IV^e chant de l'Enéide: un principe d'explication psychologique", LEC 37 (1969) 162-6.
27. G. Karl Galinsky. Aeneas, Sicily and Rome. (Princeton Monographs in Art and Archaeology, 40). (Princeton, 1969).
28. H.A. Harris, "The Games in Aeneid V", PVS 8 (1968-69) 14-25. (Lecture 90).
29. Michel Lejeune, "La langue élyme d'après les graffites de Ségeste (V^e siècle)", Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres (1969) 237-42.

30. T.E.V. Pearce, "Virgil, Aeneid 5. 279", CQ 20 (1970) 154–9.
31. R.G. Austin, "Aeneid VI, 384–476", PVS 8 (1968–9) 51–9.
32. Charles Segal, "Circean Temptations: Homer, Vergil, Ovid", TAPA 99 (1968) 419–42.
33. J. Sanz Ramos, "La leyenda de Hercules y Caco en Virgilio y en Livio", op. cit., (1) 389–403.
34. John W. Zarker, "Amata: Vergil's Other Tragic Queen", Vergilius 15 (1969) 2–24.
35. H.H. Huxley, "Note on Aeneid 10. 808–10", Vergilius 15 (1969) 32.
36. G. Karl Galinsky, "Aeneas' Invocation of Sol (Aeneid XII, 176)", AJP 90 (1969) 453–8.
37. Zoja Pavlovskis, "Gli Achei nell'Eneide", Istituto Lombardo: Accademia di Scienze e Lettere, Rendiconti 103 (1969) 315–38.
38. William S. Anderson. The Art of the Aeneid ("Landmarks in Literature") (Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1969).
39. William S. Anderson. "Pastor Aeneas: On Pastoral Themes in the Aeneid", TAPA 99 (1968) 1–18.
40. Robert W. Crutwell. Virgil's Mind at Work: An Analysis of the Symbolism of the Aeneid. ("A Marandell Book") New York, 1969. (Originally Macmillan, N.Y., Basil Blackwell, Oxford, 1947).

Two introductory studies of the Aeneid command the attention of beginners and long term disciples: W.A. Camps' An Introduction to the Aeneid (Oxford, 1969) and W.S. Anderson's The Art of the Aeneid (Berkeley, California, 1970). Both studies, different in attitude and approach, merit wide reading and large-scale adoption in classrooms and libraries. Koch's study (17) is a perceptive advance on the mathematical and rhythmic aspects of structure and design advanced by Duckworth. The latter's most recent study (52) uses Vergil's Aeneid as norm, to provide an analysis of the metrics of Vergil and other Latin poets, from Ennius to Arator and Corippus. His statistical criteria shed light on the influence of earlier poets on subsequent artists, and point up developments in the artistic evolution of separate poets. Duckworth is concerned with Vergil's metrical innovations, his metrical ties with Theocritus, links between Eclogue IV and Catullus 64, Vergil's metrical independence from Hesiod and Aratus, and the problem of Aen. 10–12 where Vergil departs from normal metrical procedure elsewhere in the Aeneid and in the Georgics. Duckworth suggests that Aen. 10–12 are unrevised. Jones (18) deals with the background to the Trojan Horse incident in other literature. Mountford's lecture (19) is a personal and revealing analysis of a favourite book. Dido claims her usual corps of adherents. Duclos (22) detects traits and aspects of Diana in the Punic Queen. Sanderlin (23) argues that the love story is told chiefly from Dido's point of view to add poignancy. Stell and Moritz (24) provide an accurate, clinical version: 'the wound thrust beneath her breast (bone) hissed aloud'. Thompson and Ferguson (25) set the incident in its historical context and address themselves to Africa in the time of Julius Caesar and Augustus. Wankenne (26) offers a sample approach to a problem in Aen. 4: the role of the gods. Galinsky's study (27) is an admirable review and assessment of the Aeneas legend in art and artifacts. Vergil emerges as a creator of the "pius Aeneas" image; aspects of the Aeneas legend in Sicily (especially Eryx and Segesta), in Etruria (where Aeneas evidences mysterious Etruscan traits), and Latium are freshly revealed and convincingly asserted. Galinsky's study of the Ara Pacis reliefs and the concordant triple reliefs in the Terme Museum and Boston's Museum of Fine Arts marks a distinct advance in their interpretation. Galinsky's study repeatedly illuminates problems in Aen. 5, and 7–12. Harris (28) sheds light on the place of sport in Roman social life through a study of Aen. 5. Lejeune (29) examines the Elymian graffiti from Segesta and postulates a hitherto unknown Italic language. Pearce (30) restates the case for "nexantem" vs. Williams "nixantem". Austin (31) provides an authoritative and sage analysis of a complex area in Aen. 6 (384–476). Segal (32) provides an engaging study of the literary life of Circe after Homer. Vergil reacts strangely to the Homeric version by underplaying her sexual implications, and by virtually eliminating her positive human side in favour of the 'mistress of animals' aspect; she symbolizes demonic, seductive power. Zarker (34) finds traits of Greek heroines in Amata, who also recalls Dido in many respects. Galinsky (36) answers recent studies of the Sol invocation in simpler terms: Latinus is assigned a solar genealogy to underscore his association with the Odyssey tradition in Italy and his ties with Rome's origins; Aeneas, who later replaced the native Sol Indiges, is associated with Apollo in Latinus' return invocation. Pavlovskis (37) detects Vergil's leanings towards a common origin for Achaeans, Italians, and Trojans as part of a fundamental ideology of Rome as unifier and leveller of peoples. But Vergil also evidences some antipathy for the Achaeans as consequence of the Trojan War. Anderson's study of pastoral themes (39) detects a progression from the simile of the innocent shepherd (Aen. 2, 304ff) to the discordant associations in Aen. 12 (521 ff., 587ff) where abstract ideals have compromised with a turbulent world. Aeneas exemplifies an affection for pastoral values, for Saturnia regna; but with his loss of innocence Aeneas is no longer the "inscius pastor" but a purposeful resolute leader. Cruttwell's involved but often perceptive study (40) has been republished.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

41. Anthony A. Barrett, "The Topography of the Gnat's Descent", CJ 65 (1970) 155–7.
42. G. Maurach, "Catal. 8 and Hellenistic Poetry", Acta Classica 12 (1969) 29–46.

Barrett's article on the Culex treats the katabasis of the gnat with reference to Vergil's later versions; Maurach (42) is concerned with Catalepton 8, which relates to Vergil's evacuation from Mantua and his residence at Siro's Neapolitan Garden, with the Hellenistic aspects of the poem and its inspiration.

GENERAL STUDIES, CLASSICAL TRADITION, ARCHAEOLOGY

43. Cyril Bailey. Religion in Vergil. (Barnes & Noble, N.Y., 1969) (originally Oxford, 1935).
44. G. Bendz, "Vergil in Sperlonga". Opuscula Romana 7 (Acta Instituti Romani Regni Sueciae) (Lund, 1969).
45. Harry Berger, Jr., "Archaism, vision and revision: studies in Virgil, Plato and Milton", The Centennial Review 11 (1967) 24–52.

46. D.W. Black, "Epic and Encomium", PVS 8 (1968–9) 38–48 (Lect. No. 92).
47. P.H.V. Blanckenhagen, "Laokoon, Sperlonga und Vergil", Archäologischer Anzeiger (1969) 256–300.
48. Philip Damon, "Myth, Metaphor, and the Epic Tradition", Orbis Litterarum 24 (1969) 85–100.
49. Alfred David, "Gawain and Aeneas", English Studies 49 (1968) 402–9.
50. O.A.W. Dilke, "Virgil and Lucan", PVS 8 (1968–69) 2–12 (Lect. No. 88).
51. Sigmar Döpp, "Virgilischer Einfluss im Werk Ovids". (Diss., Munich) (Verlag UNIDruck, 1968).
52. G.E. Duckworth. Virgil and Classical Hexameter Poetry: A Study in Metrical Variety. (Michigan, 1969).
53. A. Fontan, "Los poemas virgilianos, los tres 'stili' y la 'rota Vergilii'", op. cit., (1) 368–74.
54. Robert E. Gaebel, "The Greek Word-Lists to Vergil and Cicero", Bulletin, John Rylands Library 52 (1970) 284–325.
55. T.R. Glover. *Virgil*⁷. (Barnes & Noble, N.Y., 1969) (Originally published 1904).
56. Antonino Grillone, Il sogno nell'epica Latina, tecnica e poesia. (Palermo, 1967).
57. T.J. Haarhoff, "The Element of Propaganda in Vergil", Acta Classica 11 (1968) 125–38.
58. Jens Juhl Jensen, "An Outline of Vergil's Mathematical Technique". Symb. Osl. 45 (1970) 113–7.
59. A.D. Kahn, "Byron's Single Difference with Homer and Virgil – The Definition of the Epic in "Don Juan", Arcadia 5 (1970) 143–62.
60. A. Lopez Kindler, "El hexámetro y la frase gnómico en Virgilio", op. cit., (1) 375–81.
61. Bernhard Kytzler, "Imitatio und Aemulatio in der Thebais des Statius", Hermes 97 (1969) 209–32.
62. Harry Levin. The Myth of the Golden Age in the Renaissance. (Indiana, 1969).
63. Mary Louise Lord, "Dido as an example of chastity: the influence of example literature", Harvard Library Bulletin 17:1 (1969) 22–44.
64. D. Gonzalo Maeso, "La onomatopeya o armonia imitativa en Virgilio", op. cit., (1) 334–41.
65. L.A. Moritz, "Horace's Virgil", PVS 8 (1968–69) 13–4. (Lect. No. 89).
66. Brooks Otis, review of Friedrich Klingner, Virgil. Bucolica, Georgica, Aeneis (Zurich/Stuttgart, 1967), Gnomon 41 (1969) 554–74.
67. R.F. Paget, "Portus Julius", Vergilius 15 (1969) 25–32.
68. Lorenzo Quilici, "Il Problema culturale archaeologico dei Campi Flegrei", Parola del Passato 126 (1969) 224–40.
69. K.J. Reckford. Horace. Twayne Publishers, N.Y., 1969.
70. L. Rubio, "La lengua y el estilo de Virgilio", op.cit., (1) 355–77.
71. John J.H. Savage, "The Aurea Dicta of Augustus and the Poets", TAPA 99 (1968) 401–18.
72. C.P. Segal. Landscape in Ovid's Metamorphoses. A Study in the Transformations of a Literary Symbol. (Hermes Einzelschriften, Heft 23). (Wiesbaden, 1969).
73. Anton Szantyr, "Bemerkungen zum Aufbau der Vergilischen Ekphrasis", Museum Helveticum 27 (1970) 28–40.
74. Lily Ross Taylor, "Republican and Augustan Writers Enrolled in the Equestrian Centuries", TAPA 99 (1968) 469–86.

75. Lynette Thompson, R.T. Bruère, "The Vergilian Background of Lucan's Fourth Book", CP 65 (1970) 152–72.
76. V.E. Hernández Vista, "La aliteración en Virgilio", op.cit., (1) 342–9.
77. R. Weiss. The Renaissance Discovery of Classical Antiquity. Oxford, Blackwell, 1969.
78. Gordon Williams. The Nature of Roman Poetry (Oxford, 1970).
79. Joseph S. Wittig, "The Aeneas–Dido Allusion in Chrétien's Erec et Enide", Comparative Literature 22 (1970) 237–53.
80. John W. Zarker, "A possible Vergilian parody of the Carmina Latina Epigraphica", Helikon 8 (1968) 392ff.

Cyril Bailey's authoritative study of religion in Vergil (43) is a welcome reprinting: it remains a thesaurus of insight and suggestion in a complicated area of Vergilian studies. The massive sculptures recently discovered in Tiberius' grotto at Sperlonga, of Polyphemus, and of Scylla attacking Ulysses' ship, have analogies with Vergil's literary representations (cf. Laocoon group). Bendz (44) and v. Blanckenhagen (47) concern themselves with the date of the sculptures, their origin, and the Vergilian analogies. Berger (45) charges that Juno's dwelling on past events at the outset of the Aeneid exemplifies tyrannical use of the past. Aeneas realizes that he must escape the trammels of the past (Troy) and his victory is one for the future. So also Silenus (Eclogue 6) and Orpheus (Georgics 4) exemplify poetic traditions of the past that require revision. Black's lecture (46) builds on Servius' remark that the aim of Vergil was "Augustum laudare a parentibus" and finds epinician elements in the praise of Augustus. Damon (48) argues that the thematic center of Aeneas reaches back beyond the heroic pattern of Odysseus to the basic mythic pattern of a compulsory descent into the Underworld followed by a communal victory over the forces of chaos; by his ultimate victory Aeneas rises to the level of a myth and a metaphor on the life of the Roman nation. David (49) accents mediaeval use of Troy and Aeneas as paradigms. Lucan claims attention from Dilke (50), Thompson and Bruère (75); Ovid from Döpp (51) and Segal (72); Horace from Moritz (65) and Reckford (69). Dilke (50) finds many "loci similes" and several passages of sustained borrowing in Lucan, especially the naval battle in Book 3 where details originate in a cavalry engagement (Aen. 11, 597–647). Segal's study of landscape in the Metamorphoses (72) is a sustained and illuminating study of a convention and a symbol important, inter alia, for its Vergilian observations. Döpp's dissertation (51) offers a valuable and enlightening study and estimate of Vergilian influence on Ovid's writings, particularly Heroides 7 where Ovid's customary independence of models breaks down.

Literary and compositional devices are the topic of several articles. Haarhoff (57) reviews the propaganda elements in Vergil with fresh insight and restraint; Jensen's study of mathematical technique (58) is a concise summary and example in a contentious area of research; Savage (72) with ingenuity and customary insight probes a new area of poetic inspiration; Szantyr (73) deals suggestively with the Vergilian digression in an article that should prompt fresh attention to the "ekphrasis" in Vergil; Grillone's study (56) of the epic dream has to be read alongside Hans Rudolf Steiner's exemplary Der Traum in der Aeneis ('Noctes Romanae, 5') (Bern/Stuttgart, 1952). Moritz (65) reassesses Horace Odes 4, 12 ("Iam veris comites") and argues that it was composed for Vergil: the first half recalls the Arcadia of Vergil's Eclogues, the second half is modelled on Catullus 13, and features a pre-Augustan neoteric atmosphere. So too

Horace Odes 1, 24, 13–18, recalls the end of Georgic 4 and both poems relate to the death of loved friends, Quintilius Varus, and Cornelius Gallus. Otis (66) provides a thoughtful and appreciative review of Klingner's highly respected study of Vergil's writings and advances some revised and expanding notions of his own on various sections of the study. The several articles by Spanish scholars on stylistic aspects of Vergil's poetry are modest contributions to a larger earlier literature (53, 60, 64, 70, 76). The rediscovery and fresh use of Vergil's poems are touched on in two excellent studies (62, 77), and in several articles. Mary Louise Lord's article (63) indicates that early Christian literature preferred an older, non-Vergilian tradition of Dido; Kahn's article on Byron deals with Canto I, Dido and Aeneas (147–50); Wittig (79) deals with Chrétien de Troyes' Erec et Enide in a minor passage. Archaeological advances in Campania continue to shed light on 'poetic' inspiration and contemporary relevance. Paget's (67) lynx-eyed researches in the territory of the Campi Phlegraei, especially at Baiae and Cumae, yield fresh evidence for a reassessment of the Triumvirate's response to Sextus Pompey and the militarization of the one-time sacred zone of Cumae-Avernus. Quilici (68) summarizes recent finds and provides a regional map and air photographs of Pozzuoli (where bradyseism recently accelerated and caused great duress), the Cumaeam amphitheatre (and the Villa Vergiliana), Misenum, and Baiae. Kytzler's study of Statius' Thebais (61) estimates Vergilian influences throughout. Lily Ross Taylor (74) suggests that Vergil, at the age of 26, may have received the gold ring of equestrian status from Julius Caesar, and probably occupied a seat of honor in the theatre during the recitation of the Eclogues. An abbreviated and simplified version of Gordon Williams' monumental Tradition and Originality in Roman Poetry (Oxford, 1968) has been reissued as The Nature of Roman Poetry (TORP and NORP hereafter). Zarker (80) suggests that the Ballista epitaph, ascribed to Vergil as his earliest poetic effort, may be an adaptation or parody of a sepulchral inscription.

A.G. McKay

McMaster University
September 1, 1970

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Virgil Society (England) announces that the first Jackson Knight Memorial Lecture was delivered at Exeter University on March 8, 1968: Basil Blackwell. Letters in the New Age. (Abingdon-on-Thames; Abbey Press, 1969). Sir Basil provides an appreciative review of Jackson Knight's contribution to humanistic studies, and discourses on the role of computers in literary studies. Taste, judgment, imagination, and scholarly resource in textual criticism, Jackson Knight's main concern, may find an ally in the directed machine.