

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1970 - 71

Author(s): A.G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1971, No. 17 (1971), pp. 13-21

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41591668>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1970 - 71

INTRODUCTION

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the ninth in the Vergilius series. Previous reviews may be found in Vergilius (1963) 33-6; 10 (1964) 40-44; 11 (1965) 40-47; 12 (1966) 39-45; 13 (1967) 35-41; 14 (1968) 16-27; 15 (1969) 42-52; and 16 (1970) 33-39. The forthcoming Classical World survey is being prepared by the present writer and deals with works published between 1963 and 1970. George E. Duckworth: A Bibliography (Princeton, 1971) was presented to Professor Duckworth on the occasion of his retirement and is a complete record of his articles and reviews relating to Vergil and other classical authors through 1970.

ECLOGUES

1. Thomas W. Burrows, "Virgil's First Eclogue: A Rhetorical Analysis", CB, 47 (1970) 22-6.
2. B.F. Dick, "Vergil's Pastoral Poetic: A Reading of the First Eclogue", AJP, 91(1970) 277-93.
3. Alfonso Traina, "La chiusa della prima egloga virgiliana (vv. 82-83)", Lingua e Stile,³ (1968) 45-57.
4. Otto Skutsch, "The Original Form of the Second Eclogue", HSCP, 74 (1970) 95-9.
5. Carlotta Griffiths, "Myricae", PVS, 9 (1969-70) 1-19a.
6. Charles Segal, "Two Fauns and a Naiad? (Virgil, Ecl 6.13-26)", AJP, 92, (1971) 56-61.
7. Charles Segal, "Vergil's Sixth Eclogue and the Problem of Evil", TAPA, 100 (1969) 407-35.
8. Walter Spoerri, "Zur kosmogonie in Vergils 6 Ekloge", Mus. Helv., 27 (1970) 144-63.
9. Walter Spoerri, "Antike Vergilerklärer und die Silenoskosmogonie", Mus. Helv., 27 (1970) 265-72.
10. Peter Levi, "Zu Vergils achter Ekloge", Hermes, 99 (1971) 126.
11. Andrée Richter, Virgile. La huitième bucolique (Bibl. Fac. des Lettres de Lyon, 20) Paris, 1970.
12. Robert R. Dyer, "Vergil, Eclogue 10.73-4, and the Suckering Habit of the White Alder", CP, 64 (1969) 233-4.
13. R.W. Garson, "Theokritean Elements in Virgil's Eclogues", CQ, 21 (1971) 188-203.
14. René Lecompe. Virgile, Bucoliques. Index Verborum. Relevés statistiques. Hildesheim, 1970.

15. Zoja Pavlovskis, "Man in a Poetic Landscape: Humanization of Nature in Virgil's Eclogues", CP, 66 (1971) 151-68.

Bernard Dick's article (2) accents the real-ideal tension implicit in the Arcadian landscape, an ambiguity which splits into the persons of Meliboeus and Tityrus. Enthusiasm for Octavian and Rome is tempered by historical awareness (present exile) and compassion. Skutsch (4) argues that the original form of Ecl. 2 excluded 45-55; he also discovers a palindrome structure for the poem. Mrs. Griffiths' lecture (5) finds symbolic implications for myrica (Ecl. 4.2): pastoral, prophecy, and Arcadia, a dream of timeless ideals in an age of turbulence. Segal (6) identifies Chromis and Mnasyllus as fauns or satyrs, not shepherds, who strengthen the mythical, unreal quality of the setting where Silenus sings; there is a sense of suspended reality in the charmed setting of the little drama. Elsewhere Segal (7) emphasizes the moral outlook Ecl. 6, discovers an integral role for the proem (1-12), and a correlation between disorder in the universe and evil within man. The Eclogue prefigures Ecl. 10 and the Aeneid where there is a greater concern for man's capacity for destructive passion in love, and above all, in war. Hardie (20) estimates the Georgics as a matrix of mythological themes first formed in Ecl. 6. The themes recur in a framework of agricultural didactic in the Georgics and of Greco-Roman history in the Aeneid. Spoerri's articles (9, 10) on the cosmogony of Silenus' song provide useful explication of a complex passage in Ecl. 6. Richter (11) offers a thesis with text, translation, and commentary and a useful bibliography. Dyer's botanical excursus (12) sheds light on Gallus' surrender to love as a rejection of escapism and repression and a commitment to a new ambition. Garson's article (13) on Theocritean elements in the Eclogues is a sensible corrective to preconditioned approaches to the detection of influences. Lecompe's index (14) will greatly assist the mounting preoccupation with Vergil's earliest capo lavoro. Pavlovskis (15) studies the originality of Vergil's attitude to nature and his humanization of nature as part of his expectation of the advent of a Golden Age.

GEORGICS

16. P.L. Tozzi, "Iscrizione latine sull'arte lanaria bresciana e Virgilio, Georgiche IV, 277-8", Athenaeum, 49 (1971) 152-7.
17. H.H. Huxley, "Fragment of an Anti-Georgic", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 28.
18. Anthony Bradley, "Augustan Culture and a Radical Alternative: Virgil's Georgics", Arion, 8:3 (1969) 347-58.
19. R.R. Dyer, "Ambition in the Georgics: Vergil's Rejection of Arcadia", Studies in Honour of E.M. Blaiklock (Auckland, 1971).
20. Colin Hardie, The Georgics: A Transitional Poem (Abingdon-on-Thames, 1971). (The Third Jackson Knight Memorial Lecture).
21. R. Jourdaux, "La philosophie politique des Géorgiques d'après Livre IV (vers 149 à 169)", Bull. L'Assoc. G. Bude, Ser. 4:1 (1971) 67-82.
22. K.D. White. Roman Farming (Aspects of Greek and Roman Life). Ithaca and London, 1970.

Tozzi's remarks (16) on the aster amellus, a purple flower favoured by bees, and a relevant artefact offers epigraphical support to the accuracy of the topography and geography of Vergil's Cisalpine Gaul. Huxley's fragment (17) of 20 verses will lighten the rigours of intensive study for all ages with its facetious style. Bradley (18) finds an alternative version and an exemplary contrast for the work culture commonly celebrated in the Georgics; the Orpheus myth is quite divorced from the work motif and productivity elsewhere and so represents Vergil's alternative response to the contemporary scene. Hardie's lecture (20) concerns itself, inter alia, with the relevance or 'integration' of the story of Aristaeus and Orpheus in the poem as a whole. The complex of themes sketched earlier in Ecl. 6 and supplemented by new themes in Georgics 1-3 are fully developed in the Aristaeus epyllion. Hardie concentrates on the underworld theme to which Vergil's mind reverts over and over in preparation for the final full treatment. Hardie notes, reasonably, that such preparation for Orpheus could not have prefaced the laudes Galli. Finally Hardie counters and expands earlier 'political', 'moral', and 'mystical' interpretations of the Aristaeus epyllion with a poetical explanation. White's study of Roman farming (22) is comprehensive and detailed, and invaluable for students of Vergil's agricultural lore.

AENEID

23. J. van der Vliet, J. Mehler. *Vergilius, Aeneis*⁶ (revised by R.E.H. Westendorp Boerma), Deel I: Boek I-VI (Leiden, 1970).
24. Janice M. Benario, "Dido and Cleopatra", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 2-6.
25. Janet P. Bews, "Aeneid I and .618?", Phoenix, 24 (1970) 130-43.
26. Alfred Bloch, "Arma virumque als heroisches Leitmotiv", Mus. Helv., 27 (1970) 206-11.
27. Raymond J. Clark, "A Classical Foundation Legend from Newfoundland", Folklore, 81 (1970) 182-4.
28. H. -P. Stahl, "'Verteidigung' des I. Buches der Aeneis", Hermes, 97 (1969) 346-61.
29. G. Stégen, "Le prologue de l'Enéide", LEC, 39 (1971) 199-214.
30. Constance Bullock-Davies, "The Image of the Limen in Aeneid II", G&R, 17 (1970) 135-41.
31. G.P. Goold, "Servius and the Helen Episode", HSCP, 74 (1970) 101-68.
32. E.L. Harrison, "Divine Action in Aeneid Book Two", Phoenix, 24 (1970) 320-32.
33. Sven Lundström, "Ein textkritisches Problem in der Aeneid", Eranos, 68 (1970) 95-108.
34. W. McLeod, "The Wooden Horse and Charon's Bark: Inconsistency in Virgil's 'Vivid Particularization' ", Phoenix, 24 (1970) 144-9.
35. Charles Saylor, "Toy Troy: The New Perspective of the Backward Glance", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 26-8.
36. Anthony Barrett, "Anna's Conduct in Aeneid 4", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 21-5.
37. Gloria S. Duclos, "Nemora inter Cresia", CJ, 66 (1971) 193-5.
38. J.N. Grant, "Dido Melissa", Phoenix, 23 (1969) 380-91.
39. H.H. Huxley, "Anna Achatae", Latinitas, 17 (1969) 282.
40. Christine Kubik, "Gegenstände als Bedeutungsträger im 4 Buch der Aeneis", Der Alt sprachliche Unterricht 13:5 (1970) 78-89.
41. Franz Loretto, "Aeneas zwischen Liebe und Pflicht", Der Alt sprachliche Unterricht 13:5 (1970) 27-40.

42. W.R. Nethercut, "Dux Femina Facti: General Dido and the Trojan" CB, 47 (1970) 26, 30.
43. Raymond J. Clark, "Two Virgilian Similes and the Herakleous Katabasis", Phoenix, 24 (1970) 244-55.
44. Manfred Lossan, "Bedingt episches iucundus bei Vergil", Eranos, 68 (1970) 109-14.
45. G. Stegen, "Les victimes aux Enfers (Aen. VI.426-449)", LEC, 38 (1970) 230-6.
46. M.C.J. Putnam, "Aeneid VII and the Aeneid", AJP, 91 (1970) 408-30.
47. Willibald Heilmann, "Aeneas und Evander in achten Buch der Aeneis", Gymnasium, 78 (1971) 76-89.
48. Eleanor Winsor Leach, "The Blindness of Mezentius (Aeneid 10.762-768)", Arethusa, 4:1, (1971) 83-90.
49. Francis A. Sullivan, S.J., "Mezentius: A Virgilian Creation", CP 64, (1969) 219-25.
50. Martin Muller, "Turnus and Hotspur: The Political Adversary in the Aeneid and Henry IV", Phoenix, 23 (1969) 278-90.
51. George Thaniel, "Turnus' Fatal Stone", Classical News and Views (Classical Assoc. of Canada), 15 (1971) 20-2.
52. Roger A. Hornsby. Patterns of Action: An Interpretation of Vergil's Epic Similes (Iowa City, 1970).
53. Eckart Menshing, "Der Interlektion heus in der Aeneis", RhMus, 113 (1970) 165-71.
54. Brian Morris, "Virgil and the Heroic Ideal", PVS, 9 (1969-70) 20-34.
55. Hans-Dieter Reeker. Die Landschaft in der Aeneis (Spudasmata XXVII), Hildesheim, 1971.
56. W.J.N. Rudd, "The citadel in the 'Aeneid' ", PCA, 67 (1970) 30.
57. D. West, "Multiple-correspondence similes in the Aeneid", JRS, 59 (1969) 40-9.
58. Walter Wimmel, "Vergil und das Atlantenfragment des Naevius", Wiener Studien, 83 (1970) 84-100.

Janice Benario (24) compares and contrasts Vergil's Dido with Horace's Cleopatra. Similarity in choice of words and expressions is hardly coincidental and Vergil's Carthaginian queen shows familiarity with Cleopatra's characteristics and Horace's portrayal. Janet Bews (25) detects flaws in Duckworth's thesis regarding the Golden Section, and argues for a controlled rather than a rigid structure straitjacketed by a formula. Clark's article (27) examines an amusing parallel between Bishop Fleming's isolation of terrain for a cathedral in St. John's Newfoundland and Dido's foundation of Carthage (Aen. 1.367-8). Stégen (29) offers an analysis of the structure and content of the contested verses preceding arma virumque. Constance Bullock-Davies (30) argues that the tragedy of Troy was conceived within a context of gates, doors, lintels, and thresholds, worthy examples of Vergil's epic originality. Goold's study (31) of the Helen episode is detailed and enlightening. Characteristics include use of the Golden Section, Vergilian metrical technique, and effective use of rhetoric and drama (Ennius and Euripides). Goold argues that the oft-disputed passage was composed before 65 A.D. (cf. Lucan, Phars. 10.53ff) by an anonymous author. Harrison (32) respects the common acceptance of the Helen passage as Vergilian and considers how Vergil came to compose the episode. Lundström (33) favours furenti (770) rather than ruenti and discards Austin's reservations about the alliteration in sine fine furenti.

McLeod (34) finds colour inconsistency in Homer's account of Odysseus' ship as red, black and blue, and of wine as black and red, and urges dispensation for Vergil's Trojan horse which is constructed of fir, maple, oak and pine, and Charon's barque, both blue and red. Saylor (35) sees Buthrotum as a diminished Troy implying an intellectual distancing for the maturing Aeneas and a change of spiritual perspective. Lilliputia suggests itself as parallel. Barrett (36) examines Aen. 4.416-36, Dido's suspicion of disloyalty in Anna and her bitterness over Anna's relations with Aeneas which Ovid (Fasti 3.543-656) made a cause célèbre. But the suspected affair is evidently a product of Dido's crazed imagination in Vergil, a diminished resonance from a larger repertoire of legends. Gloria Duclos (37) finds a subtle allusion to the Ariadne legend in nemora inter Cresia and a pertinence to Dido's unfolding tragedy in the Cretan references, topographical, mythical, and perhaps religious. Grant (38) examines the bee (and ant) similes, their application to Dido's story and their evocations. Huxley's mock-Ovidian verse epistle of 32 lines (39) exhibits Anna making a 'Gilbertian' proposal to Achates (cf. Katisha and Ko-ko). Kubik's article (40) finds meaning in the Vergilian weaponry (ensis, sagitta), clothing and exuviae, and fire, in Aen. 4. Nethercut (42) examines Aen. 1,360-6; 4,123-5, 165ff., with profit. Clark (43) studies the simile of leaves and birds (Aen. 6,309-12) in the light of earlier descents by epic champions and with attention to Orphic associations. Lossan (44) explores the implications of iucundus in Palinurus' speech Aen. 6, 347-71 (363) and favours a non-emphatic use. Putnam (46) offers a provocative study of A. 7 and emphasizes the theme of metamorphosis in the Aeneid and the meaning of the final moments of the epic. Aeneas' actions, in Putnam's view, raise questions about Rome and human life, because Aeneas' personal passions gain sway over his reason at the final crisis and the hero's stature is diminished. Heilman (47) finds Evander a substitute for Anchises. Eleanor Leach (48) examines Aen. 10.762-8 and explores the intimations of the simile. Like Orion (and Polyphemus) Mezentius moves in the darkness of spiritual blindness but the final scene features a disilluminated victor over a tired old man. There is more than astronomical lore and a suggestion of stature in the simile. Sullivan (49) is concerned with Vergil's transformation of a brutal tyrant into a broken-hearted father and pitiable human being. Muller (50) is concerned with Turnus (and Hotspur) as scapegoat and war criminal. Vergil's hero cannot possibly extend generosity to the defeated foe (unlike Shakespeare with Hotspur) and Aeneas is therefore accorded less than 'justice' for his final action. Thaniel (51) finds several associations for the 'boundary-stone' which serves as Turnus' weapon of despair (Aen. 12,896-909) but favours the 'weight' of destiny as the most relevant. Hornsby's exemplary study of Vergil's epic similes (52) shows that the similes interact with each other and with the structure, plot, character and imagery of the epic. Hornsby's well-organized research reveals unsuspected facets of Vergil's poetic technique and patterns of expression. Morris (54) argues that the concept of heroism is not merely a matter of the educative vision; narrow tenacity is a vital factor in Aeneas' presentation. There is something of the devil's friar in Aeneas and A. 7-12 mark the slow recession of his individual personality to an iron, irreducible core. Reeker's study of landscape (55) parallels areas of McKay's Vergil's Italy (88) but is more restricted and differently oriented. Reeker is concerned with the atmospheric and impressionistic effects of landscape; with periplus and periegesis in Homer, Apollonius Rhodius and Vergil, catalogues, provinces or districts (South Italy, Sicily, Cumae, and Latium (127-151), accuracy of details, etc. Rudd (56) notices Vergil's repeated interest in hilltowns as symbolic of visual beauty, antiquity, heroic defence and piety. Epic sublimity from a vantage point! West's article on similes in the Aeneid (57) marks an outstanding advance in a difficult zone of criticism and sheds fresh light on the complexities of meaning and association in the epic similes. Wimmel (58) explores Naevius frag. 44 (Warmington) and highlights Vergil's use of sculptural and costume associations in the epic.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

59. A.A. Barrett, "The Authorship of the Culex: An Evaluation of the Evidence", Latomus, 29 (1970) 348-62.
60. A.A. Barrett, "The Praise of Country Life in the Culex", Parola del Passato, 134 (1970) 323-7.
61. D. Knecht, Ciris: authenticité, histoire du texte, édition et commentaire critique. Bruges, 1970.
62. R.O.A.M. Lyne, "The Dating of the Ciris", CQ, 21 (1971) 233-53.
63. Robert Renehan, "Culex 163", RhMus, 112 (1969) 189-90.
64. Otto Skutsch, "Pseudovergiliana", CR, 21 (1971) 11.
65. G. Stégen, "Sur les vers 272-276 du Culex", Latomus, 29 (1970) 744-9.
66. Eric Van den abeele, "Remarques sur les Dirae et la Lydia de l'Appendix Vergiliana", RhMus, 112 (1969) 145-54.

The problem of authorship continues to bedevil Vergilian scholarship. Barrett's essay (59) examines past arguments and conclusions relative to the authorship of the Culex from several approaches, aesthetic, statistical, and comparative, and argues in favour of the historical approach. Since internal criteria have yielded negative results, scholars should respect the judgment of poets of the first century and share their credulity. Elsewhere (60) Barrett considers the relationship of Lucretius 2,14-61 and Georg. 2,458-540 to Culex 58-97. He argues that the Culex was probably written between De Rerum Natura and the Georgics and so supports the belief that Culex was a youthful work of Vergil. Lyne (62) favours a post-Vergilian date for Ciris, and regards it as a product of the second century which entered the Vergilian corpus by accident. Knecht's volume (61) commands respect for its sanity and reserve. One is left with a conviction that Ciris was a second century epyllion consonant with the Vergilian centones and the concept of the Vergilianus poeta. Renehan (63) prefers Idae at Culex, 163. Skutsch (64) studies Ciris 135ff., and Moretum 39ff. Stégen (65) regards Culex 272-6 as imitative of Vergil's style and technique. Van den abeele (66) detects a bucolic atmosphere in the Dirae and an elegiac theme in the Lydia.

GENERAL STUDIES, CLASSICAL TRADITION, ARCHAEOLOGY, ETC.

67. R.T.S. Baxter, "Virgil's Influence on Tacitus in Book 3 of the Histories", CP, 66 (1971) 93-107.
68. R.T. Bruère, "Some Recollections of Virgil's Drances in Later Epic", CP, 66 (1971) 30-3.

69. E. Burck, rev. L.P. Wilkinson. The Georgics of Vergil (Cambridge, 1970), Gnomon, 42 (1970) 768-76.
70. David Cairns, "Berlioz and Virgil: a Consideration of 'Les Troyens' as a Virgilian Opera", Proc. Royal Musical Association 95 (1968-9) 97ff.
71. Vincent J. Cleary, "Poetic Influence of the De Rerum Natura on the Aeneid", CB, 47 (1970) 17-21.
72. John H. D'Arms. Romans on the Bay of Naples: A Social and Cultural Study of the Villas and Their Owners from 150 B.C. to A.D. 400. Cambridge, Mass., 1970.
73. J.R. Elliott, Jr., "Virgil Shakespearanised: Berlioz and The Trojans", TLS, 9.10.69, 1160-1.
74. Wolfgang Fauth, "Funktion und Erscheinung niederer Gottheiten in Vergils Aeneis", Gymnasium, 78 (1971) 54-75.
75. Luigi Firpo. Virgilio: Le 'Georgiche'. Turin, 1969.
76. W. Gerresen. Tibullus Elegie 2.5 und Vergils Aeneis. Diss., Cologne, 1970.
77. K.W. Gransden, "The Pastoral Alternative I", Arethusa, 3:1 (1970) 103-22; "The Pastoral Alternative (concluded)", Arethusa, 3:2 (1970) 177-96.
78. Antonino Grillone, "Per la fortuna di Virgilio nel mondo greco. Lineamenti di una ricerca", Atti dell'Accademia di Scienze, Lettere, e Arti di Palermo, 28 (1967-8) (Part II, 1969) 5-8.
79. Antonino Grillone, "Virgilio nei papiri egiziani", Annali del Liceo Classico "G. Garibaldi" di Palermo 5-6 (1968-9) 2ff.
80. Thomas Halter. Vergil und Horaz: Zu einer Antinomie der Erlebensform. Berne & Munich, 1970.
81. C.G. Hardie, "The Great Antrum at Baiae", PBSR 37 (1969) 14-33.
82. M.M. Kelsall, "What God, What Mortal? The Aeneid and the English Mock-Heroic", Arion 8:3 (1969) 359-79.
83. Albert Klinz, "Römische Dichtung im Lateinunterricht", Der Altsprachliche Unterricht, 13 (1970) 41-53.
84. W.F. Jackson Knight. Elysion. On Ancient Greek and Roman Beliefs Concerning a Life after Death. With an introduction by G. Wilson Knight. New York, 1970.
85. C. Day Lewis. On Translating Poetry. Abingdon-on-Thames, 1970. (Second Jackson Knight Memorial Lecture).
86. Allen Mandelbaum. The Aeneid of Virgil. A Verse Translation. Berkeley, Calif., 1970.
87. Fred Mench, "Film Sense in the Aeneid", Arion, 8:3 (1969) 380-97.
88. Alexander G. McKay. Vergil's Italy (Greenwich, Conn.; Bath, England, 1970).
89. W.R. Nethercut, "The Ironic Priest: Propertius' 'Roman Elegies' III, 1-5: Imitations of Horace and Vergil", AJP, 91 (1970) 385-407.
90. R.F. Paget, "Piscina Mirabilis", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 11-20.
91. R.F. Paget, "The Naval Battle of Cumae in B.C. 38", Latomus 29 (1970) 363-9.
92. R.J. Rowland, "Aeneas as Hero in Twelfth-Century Ireland", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 29-32.
93. John J. Savage, "Repartee on the Palatine Hill", Vergilius, 16 (1970) 7-10.
94. Oros-Reta, "Virgile et l'épicurisme", Bull. l'Assoc. G. Budé. Actes du VIII^e Congrès (Paris, 5-10 avril, 1968) Paris, 1969 (=1970).
95. W. Spoerri, "L'épicurisme et la cosmogonie du Silène", Bull. l'Assoc. G. Budé. Actes du VIII^e Congrès (Paris, 5-10 avril, 1968). Paris, 1969 (=1970).
96. H.W. Stubbs, "Virgil and H.G. Wells: Prophets of a New Age", PVS, 9 (1969-70) 34-53.

97. R.G. Tanner, "The Georgics and Mark Antony", PVS, 9 (1969-70) 86-105.
98. David Thompson, "Allegory and Typology in the Aeneid" Arethusa, 3:2 (1970) 147-54.
99. G.B. Townend, "Virgil Unpunctuated", PVS 9, (1969-70) 76-86.
100. Hermann Trankle, "Properz über Virgils Aeneis", Mus. Helv., 28 (1971) 60-3.
101. D.W. Vessey, "Nescio Quid Maius", PVS, 9 (1969-70) 53-76.
102. M. von Albrecht, rev. D.R. Dudley (ed.), Virgil ("Studies in Latin Literature and Its Influence") (New York, 1969) Gnomon, 42 (1970) 731-2.
103. M. von Vibrecht, "Zu Vergils Erzähltechnik", Glotta, 48 (1970) 219-29.
104. David S. Wiesen, "Virgil, Minucius Felix and the Bible", Hermes, 99 (1971) 70-91.
105. Antonie Wlosok, rev. B. Otis, Virgil: A Study in Civilized Poetry (Oxford, 1963) Gnomon, 42 (1970) 450-63.

Baxter (67) analyses three climatic passages in Tacitus' Histories, Book 3, and discovers numerous Vergilian reminiscences grouped in too significant a fashion to be fortuitous. There appears to be a conscious plan of a complex series of echoes from Aeneid 2 which imparts a structural unity, a color Vergilianus, and another dimension to the Sack of Cremona, Burning of the Capitol, and Death of Vitellius. Bruère (68) traces Drances in Lucan, Silius Italicus, etc., including Milton's embodiment in Belial (Paradise Lost 2, 108-116). Burck's review of Wilkinson's Georgics (69) is masterly and helpful. Cairns (70) and Elliott (73) both examine the influence of Vergil on Les Troyens of Berlioz with skill and insight, suggesting a new line of inquiry for Vergilian scholars. D'Arms (72) illuminates the Vergilian terrain around Cumae and the Campi Phlegraei. He consigns Vergil to Siro's villula at Neapolis ca. 37 B.C. Fauth (74) provides a comprehensive and original account of the underworld deities and demons (e.g., Aen. 7., 445-61; 12,845-55; 5,654-63; 4,693-705, etc. Gransden (77, bis) defends pastoral against charges of being trivial or insignificant; it provides insights into human experience and human values which higher genres of poetry either ignore or treat by borrowing from lower styles (satire and pastoral). Grillone (78) treats two different Greek translations of A. 1, 649-51 and 702-7 preserved on papyri, and additional instances in other papyri (79). Hardie (81) examines the mysterious antrum at Baiae and dispels Vergilian acquaintance with the tunnel which was probably designed for Orphic or other initiates during the tyranny of Aristodemus at Cumae (525-505 B.C.?). Pope's Dunciad engages the attention of Kelsall (82) as criticism of Vergil's art. Within the mock-heroic mode Kelsall finds latent criticism of Master Vergil. Klinz (83) analyses the Atlas simile (Aen. 4, 245-51) and the shield (Aen. 8,617-25; 729-31) and Aen. 12,818-41) in exemplary didactic fashion. Jackson Knight's remarks (84) on spiritualistic survival, paranormal communication, and the eventual progression of spirits from earth to a new-dimensional world, i.e., Elysium, are intensely personal and contentious. Vergil, whose spirit Jackson Knight suggests was converted after death to Christianity, plays a significant role in the argument. Day Lewis' lecture (85) ranges from Sophocles to Vergil and modern poets. His remarks on the problems that confront translators of poetry are timely and stem from a rich and chequered experience. Mandelbaum's translation of the Aeneid (86) retains the imagery, explicit and implicit, of the Vergilian text, with dogged persistence and frequent success. Mench (87) explores Vergil's Aeneid, especially Books 4, 10, and 12, from the standpoint of a filmmaker. Vergil's kinetic visual approach (montage, variation of viewing angle, alternation of close-up and distance shot, etc.) makes him susceptible to cinematic criticism and production! Cutting, dissolves, stop-action, zoom, flexibility are all part of his stylistic repertoire. McKay's study (88) of Vergil's literary topography treats the achievement of Vergil, and six geographical areas: Cisalpine Gaul and Lombardy; Etruria; Rome; Latium; Campania, Lucania, and Central Italy; Magna Graecia and Sicily. It highlights Vergil's genius as landscape artist and as Italy's most sensitive interpreter. 73 black and white illustrations and 5 maps help to illuminate the argument. Paget (90) describes the great monument of Bacoli from several viewpoints: as silo, dry-goods store, cistern, and temple, with a preference for the last, suggesting that it may have housed an initiatory cult. The naval battle of Cumae (B.C. 38) impaired Sextus Pompey's designs against the triumvirate and excited Agrippa and Octavian to strong countermeasures in the shape of the Portus Julius (Avernus-Lucrinus). Paget's article (91), product of autopsy and naval experience, sheds fresh light on this neglected episode which transpired during Vergil's residence in Campania. Rowland (92) treats Aeneas in his twelfth century Irish transformation. He emerges as a more human personality, chivalrous and heroic, but less human than Vergil intended him to be. Savage (93) examines Donatus' anecdote concerning Vergil's pique at Batillus, and all such poetasters, who plagiarized and conspired to win the favour of the Palatine Princeps. Savage also examines Cornificius' distich, which derived its theme from Horace, Odes 1,12,40-52, and ostensible neo-Pythagorean influence on Vergil. Stubbs (96) treats Vergil's tendency to the apocalyptic, beginning with Ecl. 4, and discovers common traits between the tender visionary Vergil and the robust moralizing science-fiction writer. Tanner's important article (97) revives interest in Vergil's attitude towards Mark Antony before Actium. Several disputed passages are examined: Georg. 1,24-43, 466-516; 2,161-4, 170-2; 3,10-48; and 4,599-66. He argues that the praises and tributes to Octavian may be re-workings of earlier praises of Mark Antony, and suggests that the Georgics have a distinctive political significance. Parallels between Orpheus/Eurydice and Mark Antony/Cleopatra suggest that there may be an allegory of Actium in the Aristaeus epyllion. An appendix treats the Pindaric proem of G.3. Thompson (98) criticizes Pöschl's use of the words 'symbol' and 'symbolism' (V. Poschl, The Art of the Aeneid. Michigan, 1962). Poschl's analysis is often patently allegorical and so more aptly described as such. Townend (99) examines Mynor's Oxford Classical Text (1969) for changes and retentions of punctuation, and samples his response to sense-breaks and rhythms. Vessey (101) elucidates literary allusions and attitudes in Propertius' Elegy to give proper perspective to his praise of Vergil. Von Albrecht's review (102) of Dudley's Virgil (London and New York, 1969) is authoritative and helpful; his study of the use of tenses in the Aeneid is an important contribution to textual study (103).

A.G. McKay

McMaster University
September 1, 1971