

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1971 - 72

Author(s): A. G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1972, No. 18 (1972), pp. 16-30

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41592376>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1971 - 72

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the tenth in the Vergilius series. Previous reviews may be found in Vergilius 9 (1963) 33-6; 10 (1964) 40-44; 11 (1965) 40-47; 12 (1966) 39-45; 13 (1967) 35-41; 14 (1968) 16-27; 15 (1969) 42-52; 16 (1970) 33-39; and 17 (1971) 13-21. The next Classical World survey will deal with works published between 1963 and 1973. The editor of the Vergilian Bibliography is grateful to many colleagues who have sent reprints of articles on Vergil and on subjects relevant to Vergilian studies.

ECLOGUES

1. L.A. MacKay, "Meliboeus Exul", Vergilius 17 (1971) 2-3.
2. Rosemary M. Neilsen, "Virgil: Eclogue I", Latomus 31 (1972) 154-60.
3. P.L. Smith, "Vergil's Avena and the Pipes of Pastoral Poetry", TAPA 101 (1970) 497-510.
4. Y. García Yebra, "Sobre la traducción de un verso ambiguo di Vergilio". Estudios Clasicos 62 (1971) 87-97.
5. F. Robertson, "Vergil and Theocritus", PVS 10 (1970-71) 8-23.
6. L. Braun, "Der Sängerstreit der Hirten in Virgils dritter and siebenter Ekloge" Gymnasium 78 (1971) 400-6.
7. Eleanor W. Leach, "Eclogue 4: Symbolism and Sources", Arethusa 4:2 (1971) 167-84.
8. Jacques Perret, "Sileni theologia", Vergiliana: Recherches sur Vergile, ed. H. Bardon, R. Verdère (Leiden, 1971) 294-311.
9. Stephen V.F. Waite, "The Contest in Vergil's Seventh Eclogue", CP 67 (1972) 121-3.
10. G.W. Bowersock, "A Date in the Eight Eclogue", HSCP 73 (1971) 73-80.
11. Havas László, ed. Vergil: Eklogai. (Budapest, 1971).
12. J. Carrière. "Un procédé virgilen de 'mise en lumière'; sa fortune", LEC 39 (1971)
13. F. Cupaiuolo. Trama poetica delle Bucoliche di Virgilio (Coll. Studi Classici, 7). Napoli, 1969.
14. A. Dal Negro, "Il paesaggio Nelle Ecloghe di Virgilio", Annuario Liceo Maffei Verona (1968) 27-40.
15. G. D'Anna, "Le Bucoliche virgiliane", Cultura e scuola 8 (1969) fasc. 31, 27-35.
16. J. Fourcade, "Mots de structure molosse à l'initiale du-verse dans les Bucoliques", Pallas (Annales, L'Univ. de Toulouse 7, 3) 18 (1971) 31-53.
17. Brooks Otis, "The eclogues: a reconsideration in the light of Klingner's book", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdère) 246-59.

M.C.J. Putnam's Virgil's Pastoral Art (Princeton, 1970), which received the Award of Merit from the American Philological Association in 1971, marked a culmination and a new beginning for studies in the Eclogues. MacKay (1) argues against the assumption that Meliboeus contemplates an eventual return to his forfeited acres; the pessimism is sharp, clear, and uncompromising. Rosemary Neilsen (2) finds political misgivings in E.1., a challenge to Octavian's land policy, an appeal for the end of fratricide and cruel expropriation. To win the divine status Octavian must review his political programme. P.L. Smith (3) visualizes the avena as an oatstraw monaulos, a primitive country instrument, which intensifies the archetypal setting for the Eclogues and symbolizes the process of pastoral composition. Yebra (4) deals with the first lines of E.1. Robertson (5) studies E. 2 for adaptations, omissions and accretions of Theocritus Idylls 3 and 11, and also finds affinities between Vergil's poetic lusus and Gallus' poetic genre. Braun's study (6) of the musical competition in E. 3 and 7 marks no significant advances. Eleanor Leach (7) explores the Platonic background of the Wunderkind in E. 4 and argues that allegorized myth is the spirit behind an idealistic, philosophical vision of human government. Her awareness of the poem as a new image of the heroic is likely to be influential in subsequent criticism. Stephen Waite's study (8) of the contest in E. 7 is brief but enlightening. Bowersock's date (10) has important implications for E. 8 and for the remainder of the bucolic corpus. Carrière (12) studies V.'s lyrical manner in the bucolic poems, a blend of description and contemplation in the manner of Keats, Goethe, Lamartine etc. Brooks Otis (17) reviews his own interpretation of the Eclogues in his monumental Virgil: A Study in Civilized Poetry (Oxford, 1963). He finds that Klingner's literary sensitivity and sound historical sense have brought readers perceptibly nearer to what Vergil actually intended when he composed his bucolic poems. Otis' apologetic review is required reading for students, and an incentive to closer scrutiny of Klinger's Virgil (1967).

GEORGICS

18. Karl Büchnen, "Der Eingang der Georgia", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 70-91.
19. A.D. Escanciano, "Virgilio, Georgicas. Traducción y notas", Perficat 2 (1970) 253-71. (Ecl. 1).
20. A.D. Escanciano, "Virgilio. Georgicas. Traducción y notas", Perficat 3 (1971) 1-18. (Ecl. 2).
21. Fr. A. German, OFM., "On Georgics I", CJ 65 (1969-70) 263-6.
22. István Borzsák, "Von Hippokrates bis Virgil" Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 41-55 (Georgics III).
23. F. Capponi, "Un irrealie ornitologico", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 92-6. (Georgics III, 338).
24. J.R.C. Martin, "Juvenal 2. 78-81 and Vergil's plague", CP 65 (1970) 49-50.
25. E. Colleiro, "Allegory in the IVth Georgic", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 113-23.
26. G. Grimm, "Zu Marcus Antonius and C. Cornelius Gallus", JDAI 85 (1970) 479.
27. D.E.W. Wormell, "Apibus quanta experientia: Virgil Georgics 4. 1-227", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 429-35.

28. W.S. Anderson, rev. Wilkinson's The Georgics of Virgil (Cambridge, 1969) CJ (1971-2) 76-8.
29. R. Fischer. Das ausseritalische geographische Bild in Vergils Georgica, in den Oden des Horaz und in den Elegien des Propertius. Diss., Zurich, 1968. Review, H. Juhnke, Gnomon 42 (1970) 520-2.
30. K.R. Mackenzie. Publius Vergilius Maro: The Georgics. Translated into English verse, with etchings by Nigel Lambourne. London, 1969. Review L.P. Wilkinson, CR 22 (1972) 107-8.
31. A.G. McKay, "Applied Science and Humanity: A Study of Vergil's Georgics", Chancellor's Lectures, Brock University, St. Catharines, (Canada) (1971) 23-33.
32. Brooks Otis, "A New Study of the Georgics", Phoenix 26 (1972) 40-62. Review, Wilkinson's The Georgics of Virgil (Cambridge, 1969).
33. Adam Parry, "The Idea of Art in Virgil's Georgics", Arethusa 5:1 (1972) 35-52.
34. Karl-Heinz Pridik. Vergils Georgica. Strukturanalytische Interpretationen. Diss. Tübingen, 1971.
35. M. Ruch, "Virgile et le monde des animaux", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verière) 322-7.
36. E. de Saint-Denis, "Columelle, miroir de Virgile", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 328-43.
37. K.D. White, A Bibliography of Roman agriculture. (Inst. of Agricultural History: Bibliographies in Agricultural History. I). Reading, 1970.

Wilkinson's study of The Georgics of Virgil (Cambridge, 1969) has aroused dormant interest for Vergil's capo lavoro, two thousand years old. Escanciano's version and notes are often obvious, sometimes perceptive (19, 20). Borzsák (22) supplies new insights on the Libyan and Scythian digressions in G. 3. His comparative study of arguments and techniques in Poseidonius are important and profitable. Capponi (23) struggles with the unidentifiable acalanthis which may perhaps be linked, by association, with alcyon (cf. G. 2, 328). Coleiro's article (25) explores the double allegory underlying the community of bees and the Aristaeus episode in G. 4, and raises the ghost of C. Cornelius Gallus again. For Colleiro there are positive links between Aristaeus and the elegist, for both share guilt, against Eurydice or Augustus, both suffer loss, bees and political amicitia, and the shepherd's pardon was pattern for Gallus had he been contrite to Augustus and appealed for mercy. Colleiro argues, somewhat desperately, that Aeneid 1, 2, and 4 inspired comparable passages and expressions in G. 4, thereby implying that the Aristaeus episode was (as Servius remarked, and Büchner and Richter have accepted) inserted after the first publication of the Georgics in 29; Gallus' suicide in 26 BC therefore induced Vergil to issue a second version of the fourth Georgic. Grimm's article (26) provides fresh evidence for Gallus' role in the 30's. Wormell (27), with characteristic clarity, finds an artistic role for the bees in the composition of the Georgics. In their tiny, not wholly human way, they bridge the gap between the agricultural tragedy of Book 3 and the human tragedy of Book 4. Fischer's dissertation (29) offers important comment on the geographical digressions in the Georgics and sets the practice in a wider context. MacKenzie's verse translation (30), with contemporary etchings by Lambourne, has won the commendation of Wilkinson (CR 22 (1972) 107-8). McKay's lecture (31) marked the bimillennium of Vergil's four poetic books on agriculture and explored Vergil's successful marriage between technology and poetry along with its overtones for our present environmental and cultural crisis. Otis (32) provides a lengthy and provocative review of Wilkinson's The Georgics of Virgil (Cambridge 1969). Klinger, Otis, and Wilkinson provide a formidable triumvirate of modern scholarship on the Georgics. The late Adam Parry's lecture (33) moves from G. 3, 49-71 to a wider study of poetic invention and variety in connection with external phenomena in the Georgics. Parry concentrates on G. 4 where the train or "suite" of thought and expression is most significantly evidenced. Pridik (34) has composed a valuable study of structure which merits the closest attention from scholars. Saint-Denis (36) uses Columella to explicate some Vergilian cruxes in G. 1 (56), 2 (9-37, and 3 (40-42). K.D. White (37), noted for his remarkable study of Roman Farming (London & Ithaca, 1970), provides additional fodder for technical explication of the Georgics in his bibliography.

AENEID

38. R.D. Williams (ed.) The Aeneid of Virgil. Books I-VI. London, New York, 1972.
39. R.G. Austin (ed.) P. Vergili Maronis "Aeneidos", Liber primus. Oxford, New York, 1971.
40. Charles Segal, "The Songs of Iopas in the Aeneid", Hermes 99 (1971) 336-49.
41. J.M. Mir, "Laocoontis embolium, Aen. 2, 40-50, 199-227", Latinitas 17 (1969) 96-112.
42. John Ferguson, "Fire and Wound: The imagery of Aeneid iv. lff.", PVS 10 (1970-71) 57-63.
43. Viktor Pöschl, "Dido und Aeneas", Festschrift Karl Vretska (ed. D. Ableitinger, H. Gugel. Heidelberg, 1970).
44. A.-M. Tupet, "Didon magicienne", REL 48 (1970) 229-58.
45. R.D. Williams, "Dido's reply to Aeneas (Aen. 4. 362-387)", Vergiliana (Bardon, Verdrière) 422-8.
46. Stephen Bertman, "The Generation Gap and Aeneid 5", Vergilius 17 (1971) 9-12.
47. H. Opperman, "Vergil, Aeneis V. 847 und die Palinurus episode", Hermes 99 (1971) 164-73.
48. P. Somville, "Sur quelques vers de Virgile", LEC 39 (1971) 360-3.
49. G. Stégen, "Un match de pugilat vu par Virgile (Énéide, V, 362-472)", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 344-57.
50. N.I. Barbu, "Valeurs romaines et idéaux humaines dans le livre VI de l'Énéide" Vergiliana (ed. Bardon. Verdrière) 19-34.
51. R. Hanslik, "Lokale inkonzinnitäten vor dem Palast des Hades in Vergils Aeneis vi", Festschrift Karl Vretska (ed. D. Ableitinger, H. Gugel), Heidelberg, 1970.
52. Florence Dupont, Jean Pierre Neraudau, "Marcellus dans le chant vi de l'Énéide", REL 48 (1970) 259-76.

53. R. Rieks, "Die Tränen des Helden", Silvae: Festschrift E. Zinn (Tübingen, 1970), 183-198.
54. H.C. Rutledge, "The Opening of Aeneid 6", CJ 67 (1971-2) 110-5.
55. R. Sabbadini. Virgilio, Eneide. Libro VI. Introduz., comm. e note. Revisione di C. Marchesi. Torino, 1970. (reprint)
56. Raymond V. Schoder, SJ., "Vergil's use of the Cumae Area", CJ 67 (1971-72) 97-109 (11 figures).
57. O. Seel, "Un einen Vergilvers (Aeneis VI 468), Hommages à M. Renard. Latomus, 1969, 677-688.
58. F. Solmsen, "The World of the Dead in Book 6 of the Aeneid", CP 67 (1972) 31-41.
59. G. Thaniel, "Vergil's Leaf-and-Bird Similes of Ghosts", Phoenix 25 (1971) 237-45.
60. R.D. Williams, "Virgil's Underworld — the opening scenes (Aen. 6. 268. 416)", PVS 10 (1970-71) 1-7.
61. G.B.A. Fletcher, "Notes on Virgil Aeneid VI to XII", Hommages à M. Renard Latomus, 1969, 350-7.
62. H.H. Huxley, "Sir Winston Churchill, Aeneid 7 and the Vocative Case", CJ 67 (1971-2) 68-9.
63. Edmond Jung, "Les noms du Tibre et de Rome. Matériaux et questions", Rev. Int. Onomastique (July, 1971).
64. Reinhold Merkelbach, "Aeneia nutrix", RhMus 114 (1971) 349-51.
65. Walter Wimmel. Zur Frage von Vergils dichterischen Technik in der Aeneismitte. Marburg, 1969.
66. R.G. Tanner, "Some Problems in Aeneid 7-12", PVS 10 (1970-71) 37-44.
67. Gerhard Binder. Aeneas und Augustus. Interpretationen zum 8 Buch der Aeneis. Meisenheim am Glan, 1971. (Beiträge zur Klassischen Philologie, 38).
68. G.K. Galinsky, "Hercules and the Hydra (Virgil Aen. 8. 299-300)", CP 67 (1972) 197.
69. W. Huebner, "Lambo. Die Wölfin und die Säuglinge auf dem Schild des Aeneas" MH 26 (1969) 44-8.
70. E. Paratore, "Hercule et Cacus chez Virgile et Tite-Live", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 260-82.
71. F. della Corte, "Commento topographico al IX dell' Eneide", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 137-57.
72. Justin Glenn, "Homer's 'God-Trusting' Cyclopes", CW 65 (1972) 218-20.
73. R. Sabbadini. Virgilio, Eneide, Libro X. Introduz., comm. e note. Revisione di C. Marchesi. Torino, 1970.
74. G.B. Conte, "Il balteo di Pallante", RFIC 98 (1970) 292-300.
75. J. Perret. "Le serment d'Enée (Aen. XII, 189-94) et les événements politiques de janvier 27", REL 47 (1970).
76. W.S. Anderson, "Two Passages from Book Twelve of the Aeneid", Calif. Studies. Class. Antiquity 4 (1971) 49-65.
77. A.M. Assereto, "Dall 'Etiopide all 'Eneide", Mythos: Scripta in hon. M. Untersteiner (Genova, 1970) 51-8.

78. A.J. Boyle, "The Meaning of the Aeneid: A Critical Inquiry: Part I — Empire and the Individual: An Examination of the Aeneid's Major Theme", Ramus, Critical Studies in Greek and Roman Literature 1 (1972) 63-90. (Publ. by Department of Classical Studies, Monash University, Clayton, Victoria, Australia).
79. J.P. Brisson, "Temps historique et temps mythique dans l'Énéide", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 56-69.
80. Justin Glenn, "Mezentius, Contemptor Divum", Vergilius 17 (1971) 7-8.
81. E. Heitsch. Epische Kunstsprache und homerische Chronologie. Heidelberg, 1968.
82. L. Johnston, "Hic pietatis honos?" CB 47 (1971) 73-5.
83. G. Kilroy, "The Dido episode and the sixty-fourth poem of Catullus", SO 44 (1969) 48-60.
84. A. La Penna, "Spunti Sociologici per l'interpretazione dell 'Eneide", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 283-93.
85. A. Lebois, "Didon dans l'Énéide de Virgile", Avignon, 1969. Rev. P. Bertrac, Bull. Assoc. G. Budé (1969) 199-201.
86. F.W. Lenz, "The incomplete verses in Vergil's Aeneid. A critical report", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 158-74.
87. Godo Lieberg, "Vergils Aeneis als Dichtung der Einsamkeit", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 175-91.
88. A.F. Lossev, "Les mouvements affectifs exaltés dans l'Énéide, leurs sens philosophique et stylistique", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 192-211.
89. Helga Nehrkorn, "A Homeric Episode in Vergil's Aeneid", AJP 92 (1971) 566-84.
90. W.R. Nethercut, "The Imagery of the Aeneid", CJ 67 (1971-2) 123-43.
91. G.B. Pighi, "Roma e Cartagine in Virgilio e Orazio", Rend. Instit. Lombardo 103 (1969) 741-54.
92. M. Ruch, "Le destin dans l'Énéide: essence et réalité", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 213-21.
93. Stanislaw Stabryla. Latin Tragedy in Virgil's Poetry (transl. from Polish). Warsaw, 1970.
94. D.J. Stewart, "Sunt Lacrimae Rerum", CJ 67 (1971-2) 116-22.
95. Francis A. Sullivan SJ., "Volcanoes and Volcanic Characters in Virgil", CP 67 (1972) 186-191.
96. A.A. Takho-Godi, "Valeur stylistique des thèmes chthoniens dans l'Énéide de Virgile?" Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdrière) 358-74.
97. Agathe Thornton, "Why did Virgil compose a 'Homeric epic'?", Prudentia 3:2 (1971) 75-98 (University of Auckland, New Zealand).
98. H.L. Tracy, "Auguria Divom in Vergil's Works", Vergilius 17 (1971) 4-6.
99. P.G. Van Wees. Poetische Geografie in Virgilius' Aeneis. Tilburg, 1970.
100. L. Vidman, "Les héros virgiliens et les inscriptions latines", Anc. Soc. 2 (1971) 162-73.
101. M. von Albrecht, "Zur Tragik von Vergils Turnusgestalt: Aristotelisches in der Aeneis", Silvae. Festschrift E. Zinn (Tubingen, 1970) 1-5.

Williams (38) has provided a long-sought successor to Page's Aeneid in the well-thumbed Macmillan series. With customary grace and perception

Deryck Williams brings insight and a measure of excitement to practically every page of his textbook. He carefully notes his departures from the text of Mynors and Hirtzel, and generally convinces one of the wisdom of his choice. Students and lecturers will welcome this first volume with joy and gratitude. The commentary (154-517) is refreshingly modern, nicely attuned to structure, thematic language and poetics. Austin (39), with customary authority, style, and a measure of polemic, provides the first detailed English commentary on Aeneid I since R.S. Conway's edition (1935). The text and commentary are exemplary, and offer a fine inducement to studious, pleasurable reading. Segal (40) interprets the Iopas vignette and the elaborate cosmological song in its immediate and larger context. He notes that the subject matter enlarges to cosmic proportions the imagery of fire and darkness which pervades the close of Aeneid 1. The bard's song telescopes present and future, individual and cosmic destinies, into a single moment of poetic vision. The alignment of human events with universal processes for mutual illumination is perfectly evidenced in Iopas' song where the broader, Platonic mysteries, are glimpsed in this prelude to human tragedy. Ferguson (42) offers further comment on the controlling images of fire and wound in Aen. 4. Only the hearth-fire, token of domesticity and family life, is missing. The wound has two tangential aspects: (1) disease (fire and poison), and (2) the hunt (hunter and quarry). Bertman's article (46) explores the polarity of generations in Aen. 5, where the generation gap is given symbolic, forceful exposition. Opperman (47) and Somville (48) provide critical studies of the Palinurus episode in Aen. 5. Both concentrate on the Somnus passage, the implications of the intrusion and the response of the helmsman. Stégen (49) compares and contrasts the Vergilian boxing match with Homer, Iliad, 23, 653-75, the obvious model, but with important structural differences. Barbu (50) deals with the hierarchy of human values and the law of universal necessity discernible in Aen. 6. Dupont-Neraudau (52) combine to give some novel insights into the Marcellus episode. Rieks (53) and Rutledge (54) are complementary exercises; Rieks is concerned with the heroic pomp at the close, Rutledge with the Daedalic gallery at the outset of Aen. 6. Rutledge argues that the artist is a creature of marked insight, with interpretative gifts which can impart order, direction and definition to men's lives; Aeneas studies the panels with a sense of their importance. The labyrinth suggests the ordeal and the triumph which await Aeneas in the underworld. Sabbadini's (5) Aeneid 6, with commentary, is a welcome reprint and worthy of wider study. Rev. R.V. Schoder's pictorial study (56) of the Campi Phlegraei repeats his earlier article in Romanitas 9 (1970) 187-98. He provides superb photographs of the area which made a profound impression on the poet and on modern Vergilians who follow in his steps. Solmsen (58) argues against the tripartite scheme of Aen. 6, detected by Norden, Frances Norwood, and Otis, as irrelevant and inadequate. He underscores the overriding importance of the dichotomous pattern. Impressed with Vergil's sympathy with the individual in his physical and emotional anguish, Solmsen finds the same sensitivity in Aen. 6: the meaning of life is evidenced in a divine world scheme (Anchises' sermon) prior to the galaxy of warriors and statesmen. Thaniel (59) counters Raymond L. Clark (Phoenix 24 (1970) 244-55) in his analysis of Aen. 6, 309-12 where the line of descent for the leaf-simile is Homer-Apollonius Rhodius-Vergil, and Bacchylides-Vergil, and for the bird-simile, Homer-Apollonius Rhodius-Vergil, and Sophocles-Vergil. Thaniel discards the Catabasis of Heracles, favoured by Norden, as will-o'-the-wisp and undemonstrable as a source. Williams (60) comments on Vergil's use of traditional material as background for what is special and personal to himself and the poem: the shapes at the entrance, Charon's boat, and the ghost of Palinurus. Charon's presence, the traditional boatman and the river, helps to diminish the tension; the pictorial, mock-heroic writing is an intermezzo to the pathos of Palinurus and Dido. Huxley (62) offers a comic expansion of Aeneid 7, 107-34 in hexameters. Jung (63) provides background to Vergil's use of Thybris, the Lydian stream. Merkelbach (64) finds typical Roman epigrammatic formulae in the address to Caieta. Her death marks the transition to the Roman half of the Aeneid. Wimmel (65) explores bucolic themes and expressions which characterize the central books (5-8) of the epic, the Alexandrian books which separate the Odyssey and Iliad portions. The bucolic aspect of the middle books helps to diminish the epic-heroic scale and portentous atmosphere; there is instead, an easy familiarity, a world of dreams, delusions, and pastoral and rural elements reminiscent of the Eclogues and Georgics. Wimmel's brief study (21 pages) merits the closest attention by scholars. Tanner (66) favours an allegorical interpretation of the last six books of the epic. Convinced that the political and military events connected with Mutina, Philippi, Perusia and Actium lurk beneath the poetic lines, Tanner finds Cicero the pattern for Evander and Pallas, Catiline for Cacus, Maecenas for Tarchon. Nisus and Euryalus reflect Hirtius and Pansa (a counterpart discovered earlier in my Vergil's Italy p.45); Achates is a rather tight-lipped reflection of Agrippa. Behind Drances there lies neither Cicero nor Maecenas, whose names have been preferred earlier, but L. Munatius Plancus. The impact of contemporary politics on the poet has rarely been argued so vigorously. Latinus-Lepidus, Lavinia-Servilia, Amata-Servilia the Elder, mother of Brutus, will haunt the imagination far more disturbingly than Octavian-Aeneas or Antony-Turnus. Binder (67) offers the best available interpretation of Aen. 8 so far available. He provides a grand explication de texte, a line-by-line analysis of the book, with heavy emphasis (133 pages) on the shield. This model of detailed scholarship will do much to remedy popular disinterest in the last six books of the epic. Galinsky (68) advances Plato, Euthyd. 297C, to illuminate Aen. 8, 299-30. Plato's equation of the Hydra with cleverness and reason brings Hercules into a philosophical context. Vergil's rationis egentem indicates that only a rational hero can prevail over the Hydra's dangers. So Hercules emerges even more clearly as a worthy model for Aeneas. The conqueror of Cacus is pattern for Aeneas' victory over Turnus; ratio and justified furor (8, 228-30) are complementary and decisive for Aeneas' ultimate victory. Paratore (70) notes that Livy discards the Arcadian-Greek emphasis in his account of the Hercules-Cacus encounter. Della Corte (71) detects a triangle of sites for the military theatre in Aen. 9: Ardea, Turnus' citadel; Ostia, the site of Troia; and Laurentum, Castel di Decima. The Nisus-Euryalus tragedy comes to pass in the territories of Latinus where Ascanius hunted originally, in terrain which Latinus will ultimately bestow on the Trojans to conclude the pact. Justin Glenn (71) parallels Popyphemus' impiety (Odys. 9, 275f) with Aen. 10, 689f. Both passages reflect the pious attitudes of the writers and are not a contradiction of the character's roles as scornors of the gods. Sabbadini's Aeneid 10 (72), in a recent reprint, should inspire scholars to closer study of one of the major books. Anderson (75) treats the omen at the truce negotiations (12, 244-56) and the meaning of Aeneas' rolling eyes (12,939). The omen inspires the Italians to further revelation of their pathetic but characteristic irrationality; they identify their violent, bloodthirsty leader with a helpless swan; Aeneas they equate with the predatory eagle. The false omen which Juturna inspires merely postpones Turnus' death and is ironically reminiscent of the omen in Aen. 1, 393-400. Volvere oculos may be a Vergilian invention. It signifies either emotional disturbance or hesitation. Anderson favours hesitation as characteristic of Aeneas' special kind of heroism. Copley's translation — 'his eyes wavered' — captures the poet's intention. Boyle (77) ignores biographical postulates and historical contexts in his study of the meaning of the epic. He treats the ideology-reality dichotomy, the disparity between the ideal of empire and the practice as reflected by Vergil, and the disparity between achievement and cost, which is the pervasive, arresting theme of the poem. Boyle is impressed with the constellation of thematically related images of serpent, fire, wound, and storm. He concludes Part I of his study with the commonplace of Vergilian criticism in the 60's and 70's: 'Vergil's concern (is) to emphasize that it is a victory for the forces of non-reason and the triumph not of pietas but of furor.' Glenn (79) is concerned with Vergil's failure to allude to Mezentius' impious demand for first-fruits (Varro, Dion. Hal., Ovid). La Penna (83) examines Drances (Aen. 11, 122f) as a model of the contemporary novus homo in late Republican politics, and brings Nisus and Euryalus into the context of Horace, Odes 3.2. Drances, Nisus, and Euryalus have Homeric and contemporary counterparts in an age of revolution. Lenz (85) examines 58 hemistichs in the Aeneid, detects various types, and concludes that some may have been deliberate poetic innovation, that some may have been left incomplete for want of inspiration, and that one may be another's contribution. Lossev (87) provides an account of Vergil's terminology for madness, irrational conduct, extreme passion, hysteria, etc. Besides the psychological aspect, the terminology merits continued study from philosophical and stylistic viewpoints as counterweight to the heroic quest for harmony, equilibrium, rationality, etc. Helga Nehrkorn (88) studies elements deriving from one Homeric episode (Il. 5, 239ff) as they reappear in different parts of the Aeneid and in different contexts. The guiding principle seems to be 'reversal' of the more important aspects of the Homeric episode to strengthen pius Aeneas in his appointed task. Nethercut's study of imagery (89) includes the rending of nature; serpent, flame and arrow; and the Second Achilles. Nethercut shares Putnam's concern for the highly dubious quality of the hero's actions and destiny. Stabryla (92) studies verbal borrowings, words and subject matter, and verbal structural borrowings from Latin tragedy which can be detected in Vergil's epic. Amata owes much to Accius' Bacchae (as well as Greek tragedy), and Ennius' Alexander plays a generally important role as contributor to Vergilian tragic language and situation. Stabryla's study, coupled with that of Michael Wigodsky (158), marks significant progress along a difficult path. Stewart (93) interprets A. 1, 461-2, which Klingner called 'daring, tentative and mysterious' with the translation: 'and the universe has sympathy for us, and deeds of the past do affect men's minds'. The events of the past (mortalia) do not lose their power to affect our minds in the present. Rev. R.A. Sullivan (94) examines Aen. 3, 571ff., 7, 413ff., 783-8, for volcanic associations, a nearby phenomenon for Vergil on Neapolitan Posillipo. Turnus is characteristically compact of fire but Aeneas shares the same phenomenon at critical junctures. Takho-Godi (95) finds that the chthonic powers, however discordant, impetuous, irrational, and subversive, play a substantial role in the epic as a stylistic and antagonistic feature. Agathe Thornton (96) argues that Vergil was deeply interested in moral instruction, particularly of the young, that he was concerned with the structure of moral values in an earthly and cosmological setting, and that he welcomed the challenge of Homeric poetry to his creative genius. But the prime motivation to epic composition was educational. Tracy (97) concentrates on omens and divination in Vergil's opera and argues that they are not to be viewed as a matter of literary or political etiquette, but as a positive directional force. Their prevalence in Aen. 1-6 diminishes in Aen. 7-12, where the colours are brighter and the initiative is human. Aen. 6 may be viewed as an avowal of Vergil's desertion of Epicurus for modified Stoicism with its concomitant doctrine of Providence and divine concern for human affairs. Van Wees (98) examines geographical names as stylistic ornament, finds several categories of their usage, and extols them as marks of scholarship and important insights into the poet's desire for euphony, and into the range of his associational thinking.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

102. G.I. Carlson, E.A. Schmidt, "Form and transformation in Vergil's Catalepton", AJP 92 (1971) 252-65.
103. F.R.D. Goodyear, "The Dirae", Proc. Cambr. Philol. Soc. 197 (1971) 3-43.
104. R.E.H. Westerndorp Boerma, "Où en est aujourd'hui l'énigme de l'appendix Vergiliana", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 386-421.
105. L. Alfonsi, "Il mito di Pasifae in Virgilio", Mythos: Scripta in hon. M. Untersteiner

- (Genova, 1970) 33-6.
106. J. André, "Recherches sur les sources de Virgile", RPH 44 (1970) 11-24.
 107. F. Arnaldi, "La Poesia di Virgilio", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 6-18.
 108. F. Arnaldi, "Poesia e mito in Virgilio e in Marco Valerio", Mythos: Scripta in hon. M. Untersteiner (Genova, 1970) 43-50.
 109. H.W. Benario, "Priam and Galba", CW 65 (1972) 146-7.
 110. H. Bolte, "Catullgedicht als Hinführung zu Vergil", Der altsprachl. Unterricht 12:3 (1969) 5-14.
 111. Mario Bonaria, "Appunti per la storia della tradizione Vergiliana nel IV secolo", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 35-40.
 112. Reuben A. Brower, "Visual and Verbal Translation of Myth: Neptune in Virgil, Rubens, Dryden", Daedalus 101 (1972) 155-82.
 113. T.V. Buttrey, "Halved Coins, The Augustan Reform, and Horace Odes 1.3", AJA 76 (1972) 31-48.
 114. E. Castorina, "Sull'età dell'oro in Lucrezio e Virgilio", Studi di storiografia in memoria di Leonardo Ferrero. (Turin, 1971) 99-114.
 115. E. Castorina, "Petronio, Lucano e Virgilio", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 97-112.
 116. V. D'Agostino, "Verso il 'nuovo Virgilio'?", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 124-36.
 117. P.V. Davies. Macrobius: The "Saturnalia". Translated with an Introduction and Notes. ("Records of Civilization: Sources and Studies," No. LXXIX). New York, London, 1969.
 118. I. Del Ton, "Hexaameron S. Ambrosii Vergilium sapit", Latinitas 18 (1970) 27-31.
 119. A.C. De Lateur, SJ., "Calpurnius Siculus and Vergil", CO 49 (1972) 97-8.
 120. A. Ernout, "Composés avec in 'privatif' dans Virgile", RPH 44 (1970) 185-202.
 121. G. Karl Galinsky. The Herakles Theme. Oxford, 1972.
 122. G. Gennaro, "La véritable théologie épicurienne: Lucrèce et Virgile", Bull. Assoc. G. Budé (1969) 363-4.
 123. R.M. Henderson, "Letter to Editor" (re Piscina Mirabilis, Bauli-Bacoli), Vergilius 17 (1970) 40-2.
 124. B.L. Hijmans, Jr., "Aeneia Virtus: Vegio's Supplementum to the Aeneid", CJ 67 (1971-2) 144-55.
 125. H.G. Kolbe, "Lare Aineia?", MDAI (Roem. Abteil.) 77 (1970) 1-9.
 126. W.Kühn. Götterszenen bei Vergil. Heidelberg, 1971.
 127. H. Kuss, "Vergil und Dante. Vergleichende Interpretation der Darstellungen von Dido und Francesca im Lateinunterricht", Der altsprachl. Unterricht 12 (1969) 15-29.
 128. P. La Baume, "Auffindung des Poblicius-Grabsmonument in Köln", Gymnasium 78 (1971) 373-87.
 129. Eberhard Leube. Fortuna in Kartago: die Aeneis-Dido Mythe Vergils in den romanischen Literaturen vom 14 bis zum 16. Jahrhundert. (Studien zum Fortwirken der Antike, I). Heidelberg, 1971.
 130. H.L. Levy, "Servius in his Classroom", CJ 67 (1971-2) 167-74.
 131. G. Lieberg, "Seefahrt und Wrk. Untersuchungen zu einer Metapher der Antiken,

- besonders der Lateinischen Literature", GIF 22 (1969) 38-70.
132. W.L. Liebermann, "Die Otium-Ode des Horaz (c. II.16)", Latomus 30 (1971) 294-316.
 133. Juliet S.M. Maguinness, "Heroism in Vergil", PVS 10 (1970-71) 45-56.
 134. A.G. McKay, Ancient Campania I: Cumae and the Phlegraean Fields (Hamilton, Ontario, 1972) sv. Avernus, Campania, Capreae, Cumae.
 135. A.G. McKay, Ancient Campania, II: Naples and Coastal Campania (Hamilton, Ontario, 1972). s.v. Misenum, Neapolis, Surrentum.
 136. Miroslav Marcovich, "Tanta moles", Parola del Passato (1970) 135.
 137. E. Merone. Saggi grammaticali e stilistici latini. Napoli, 1970.
 138. A. Michel, "Virgile et la politique imperiale: un courtisan ou un philosophe?", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 212-45.
 139. J. Michelfeit, "Das augusteische Gedichtbuch", RhMus 112 (1969) 347-70.
 140. C. Moussy, "Pasco chez Virgile", RPh 43 (1969) 239-48.
 141. E. Nordera, "I virgilianismi in Valerio Flacco", Contributi a tre poeti latini (Facoltà di Magistero dell'Università di Padova, Istituto di Filologia latina), 1-92. Bologna, n.d.
 142. Robert F. Paget, "From Baiae to Misenum" (with editor's note), Vergilius 17 (1971) 22-38.
 143. E. Paratore, "L'Orlando Innamorato e l'Eneide", Il Boiardo e la critica contemporanea (1970) 347-75.
 144. A. Perutelli, "Similitudini e stile 'suggestivo' in Virgilio", Maia 24 (1972) 42-60.
 145. M.C.J. Putnam, "The Virgilian Achievement", Arethusa 5:1 (1972) 53-70.
 146. F.M. Rener, "Friedrich Spee and Vergil's Fourth Georgic", Comp. Lit. 24 (1972) 118-35.
 147. F.H. Sandbach, "Some Translators of Vergil", PVS 10 (1970-71) 24-36.
 148. Jocelyn P. Small, "Aeneas and Turnus on Late Etruscan Funerary Urns", AJA 76 (1972) 220.
 149. Walter A. Strauss. Descent and Return: The Orphic Theme in Modern Literature. Cambridge (Mass.) 1971.
 150. P. Somville, "Didon et Bérénice", LEC (1971) 79-90.
 151. J.M.C. Toynbee. Death and Burial in the Roman World. London, 1971.
 152. J. Trencsényi-Wadapfel. Von Homer bis Vergil. Gestalten und Gedanken der Antike. Berlin, 1969.
 153. Tübingen-Seminar, "Zur elision anapästischer Wörter bei Vergil and Statius", Glotta 50 (1972) 97-120.
 154. J.B. Van Sickle, "Studies of Dialectical Methodology in the Virgilian Tradition", MLN 85 (1970) 884-928.
 155. John W. Velz. Shakespeare and the Classical Tradition: A Critical Guide to Commentary, 1660-1960. Minneapolis, 1968.
 156. R. Verdière, "Notes de lecture", Vergiliana (ed. Bardon, Verdière) 375-85.
 157. C. Weber, "The Diction for Death in Latin Epic", Agon 3 (1969) 45-68.
 158. David West, "Virgilian Multiple-Correspondence Similes and their antecedents", Philologus 114 (1970) 262-75.

159. Michael Wigodsky. Vergil and Early Latin Poetry. (Hermes, Einzelschriften, Heft 24.) Wiesbaden, 1972.
160. Paul Zanker. Forum Augustum. Das Bildprogramm (Monumenta artis antiquae, 11). Tübingen, n.d.
161. Gunther Zuntz. Persephone. Three Essays on Religion and Thought in Magna Graecia. Oxford, 1971.

Benario (110 examines the Vergilian cento of Decimus Magnus Ausonius and argues that a complete text of the Vergilian works, the prototype of the 5th century Mediceus, existed in Trier during the 4th century A.D. Benario (109) detects parallels between the deaths of Priam and Galba which are too striking to be unintentional and coincidental. Buttrey (113) studies the halved Republican bronze coins of the 20's B.C. and detects a reference in Horace's Propempticon, Odes, 1, 3. Animae dimidium meae (8) is unique and has a marked commercial or financial ring about it. Buttrey advances the notion that Vergil may be equated with a piece of money in Horace's mind. The 'half of my soul' may have its visible, tangible embodiment in the divided half of the Janus-head asses then widely circulated. Division and separation are omnipresent images in the Ode and the coin could be the most remarkable image of this pervasive ambiguity. Brower (112) studies a 'Parallel Betwixt Poetry and Painting' using Vergil A. 1, 135, quos ego . . . as a poet's experience of nature, subsequently translated into a spectacular English version and a great painting. Studies of this nature are sorely needed to enlarge the context of the Vergilian lines and to shed light on elusive but characteristic facets of the poet's genius. Castorina (115) argues that the Troiae Halosis of the Satyricon is remote from Lucan and Nero, but close to Vergil, and a product of Juvenal's age. Davies' translation of Macrobius' Saturnalia (117) should renew interest in this important repository of comment and quotation for Vergilian studies. Galinsky's study of Herakles (121) is marked by careful scholarship and brilliant insights. Herakles emerges as a powerful, shaping, and inspirational figure in Roman thought and art during Vergil's lifetime. The role of Heracles has never been so broadly or so brilliantly delineated. Vergilian scholars are indebted to Galinsky for his richly productive labours with the Aeneid. Henderson (123) replies forthrightly to Paget's identification of the Piscina Mirabilis at Bacoli as temple or initiatory shrine (Vergilius 16 (1970) 11-20), and argues strongly in favour of a cistern. Hijmans (124) assesses the poetic structure of Maphaeus Vegius' Supplementum (1428) to the Aeneid to determine Vegius' understanding of the Roman masterpiece. Kolbe (125) discards the Aeneas association of the cippus inscription from Tor Tignosa (ILLRP 1271) and favours the reading Lare Vesuia Q.F. Kuhn's study (126) of episodes involving divinities in the Vergilian corpus is masterly and suggests further investigation. La Baume (128) studies a relief depicting Aeneas, Anchises, and Ascanius on a grave monument in Cologne. Lieberg (131) provides useful criticism of Vergil's marine imagery in the Aeneid. Liebermann (132) studies Horace's Otium divos rogat in patenti (2, 16) and finds parallels and useful insights elsewhere in Horace and in Vergil. Levy (130) examines the classroom notes of

Servius and discusses 49 examples covering A. 1-12 where Servius suggests, or passes on, an ordo verborum which renders the Latin intelligible to Latin-speaking students. Levy's article provides a valuable glimpse of instructional technique in the ancient world and a possible model for contemporary practice. Juliet Maguinness (133) examines Aeneas, the 'reluctant hero', and his counterpart, Turnus. She finds Aeneas undoubtedly the most important, the most complex, and the "best" character in the epic. McKay's sourcebooks (134, 135) of ancient and modern information about historical sites in the neighbourhood of Naples provide comment on legendary and historical aspects of these ancient locales. Marcovich (136) argues that A. 1, 33 (tanta moles...) had a special value for Tacitus. M. finds evidence of indebtedness in Ann. 1, 11, 1; 1, 4, 3; 12, 66, 1; Hist. 2, 16, 1; 2, 74, 2. Paget (142) continues his autopsy of sites in the Campi Phlegraei with a study of Misenum, Bauli, the Portus Julius, Caligula's Bridge of Ships, etc. Vergilian associations will not escape the topographical and historical enthusiast. Perutelli (144) and West (158) offer fresh approaches to the similes in the Georgics and the Aeneid. Both writers provide complementary material to Hornsby's recent Patterns of Action in the Aeneid (Iowa City, 1970). Putnam (145) provides a sensitive appraisal of the epic. His concluding remark is noteworthy: (Vergil's) "realistic appraisal of Rome and of life's ultimate ambivalence — the glory but also finally the tragedy.....continues to earn for the Aeneid its status as a masterpiece". Sandbach (147) provides capsule quotations and comments on English translators of Vergil, including Thomas Phaer (1555-60), John Vicars (1632), Dryden (1697) and others; for the nineteenth century versions Sandbach has no favourable comment. He singles out Patric Dickinson (1961), Rolfe Humpries (1951), the late C. Day Lewis, and Jackson Knight for special comment among the moderns. Jocelyn Toynbee (151) is less concerned with beliefs about the afterlife than with burial practices, but there are many illuminating areas in her study which will affect Vergilian studies. Augustus' cylindrical mausoleum in the Campus Martius (28 BC) was almost certainly influenced by Etruscan patterns at Cerveteri etc. Just as the Augustan architect responded to visual history so too the Augustan pro-Etruscan policy was another recreation of the past. The implication of this retrospective attitude cannot be lost on students on Vergil. Zanker's study of the sculptural details of the Augustan Forum (160) has important implications for study of the structure of the Aeneid and for the poet's use of artworks throughout. Verdière (156) includes the Ecologues and Dido in his lecture notes. Wigodsky (159) expands his Princeton doctoral dissertation (1964) into a profound study of the impact of early Latin poetry on Vergil. Considerable attention is given to Livius Andronicus, Naevius, Ennius (40-79), Pacuvius and Accius (80-97), et al. Scholars will appreciate his epilogue on Catullus and Lucretius (126-39), and on Vergil and Horace (147-8). Gunther Zuntz (161) is not concerned directly with the impact of South Italian cult and belief on Vergil but the implications are legion. His failure to refer to the great Antrum discovered by R.F. Paget at Baiae (C. Hardie, PBSR 37 (1969) 14-33) omits a monument of unique importance to the mystery cults of Magna Graecia and of Republican Italy.

A. G. McKay

McMaster University

QUESTUS EQUINUS

Herbert H. Huxley

Quis fuit abiegnum¹ docta qui mente caballum
 Protulit?² hoc fallax fecit Epeos opus.
 Fecit Epeos opus, sed non sine Palladis arte³
 Virginis; est virgo maxima causa mali!⁴
 Ille ego sum sonipes, donum exitiale⁵, dolosus,
 Cui latera infenso milite dura tument.
 Si procul arma sonant, miscet si proelia Mavors,
 Non quatio sonitu quadrupedante⁶ solum.
 Adde quod haud possum caudam vibrare minacem,
 Undique cum muscae, turba proterva, volant.
 Torret sol pictos nimio fervore colores:
 Quam male — di magni — lignea pellis olet!
 Iratusque Thoas mea viscera calcatur equini
 Carceris impatiens impatiensque morae.
 Mordaci Sthenelus vexatur pulice; torvum
 Nausea sollicitat foeda Neoptolemum.
 Quot mihi sunt causae cur tam sim tristis! at olim
 Nostra — loquor verum — fama perennis erit.
 Ille cadam sonipes, sed erit mihi nobile nomen;
 Austinusque⁷ meos tollet ad astra dolos.

1. Propertius, 4.1.42.
2. Tibullus, 1.10.1.
3. Virgil, Aen. 2, 15.
4. Seneca, Hippolytus, 559 — dux malorum femina.
5. Aen. 2, 31.
6. Aen. 8, 596.
7. Roland G. Austin, P. Vergili Maronis Aeneidos Liber Secundus (Oxford, 1964), especially Ronald Knox's Letter from Ulysses to Penelope (written inside the Trojan Horse), p. 295.

Editorial Notes — continued from page 1

History in Honour of Edward Togo Salmon (Ed. J. A. S. Evans) are ancient historians from six countries. The bibliography has been compiled by A. G. McKay. All enquiries should be addressed to the publisher, A. M. Hakkert Ltd., 554 Spadina Crescent, Toronto 179, or in Europe, Adolf Hakkert, N.V., Herengracht 73, Amsterdam, Netherlands.

J.A.S. Evans/ Editor: Vergilius.