

VERGILIUS

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY / 1972 - 73

Author(s): A.G. McKay

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1973, No. 19 (1973), pp. 33-40

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41592082>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

JSTOR

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY / 1972 - 73

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the eleventh in the Vergilius series. Previous reviews may be found in Vergilius 9 (1963) 33-6; 10 (1964) 40-44; 11 (1965) 40-47; 12 (1966) 39-45; 13 (1967) 35-41; 14 (1968) 16-27; 15 (1969) 42-52; 16 (1970) 33-39; 17 (1971) 13-21; and 18 (1972) 16-30. The forthcoming Classical World survey deals with works published between 1963 and 1973. The editor of the Vergilian Bibliography is grateful to many colleagues who have sent reprints of articles and bibliographical notices for inclusion in this and earlier bibliographies.

ECLOGUES

1. Marius Geymorat (ed.), P. Vergilius Maro. Opera (post Remigium Sabbadini, Aloisium Castiglioni). Torino, 1973.
2. Pierre Boyancé, 'Lectures virgiliennes. La première Bucolique', Bull. de l'Assoc. G. Budé. Lettres d'Humanité 31. Ser. 4. No. 4 (1972) 495-502.
3. Wendell Clausen, 'On the Date of the first Eclogue', HSCP 76 (1972) 201-5.
4. E. Flintoff, 'Virgil, Eclogue 4. 8-10', CR 23 (1973) 10-11.
5. E.A. Schmidt, 'Poesia e politica nella nona ecloga di Virgilio', Maia 24 (1972) 99-119.
6. Harry C. Rutledge, 'The Surrealist Tenth Eclogue', Vergilius 18 (1972) 2-9.
7. H. Bardon, 'Bucolique et Politique', RhMus 115 (1972) 1-13.
8. R.G. Coleman, 'Vergil and the Pastoral', PCA 69 (1972) 32-3.
9. E.A. Schmidt. Poetische Reflexion. Vergils Bukolik. Munich, 1972.
10. Margaret M.A. Shaw. Place in the Eclogues. Diss., Austin, University of Texas, 1971.
11. J.B. Van Sickle, rev. T.G. Rosenmeyer, The Green Cabinet; Theocritus and the European Pastoral Lyric (Berkeley, Calif. 1969), AJP 93 (1972) 348-54.

Geymorat's text continues to underscore the authority of Sabbadini's original (Rome, 1930) throughout. Boyancé's lecture (2) offers a lucid 'reading' of the text of Eclogue 1 deliberately avoiding trendy interpretations and abstruse pronouncements in favor of obvious responses to the language and sensibility of the poet. Clausen (3) sheds fresh light on the chronology of the Eclogues in general in his particular study of the likely date for Eclogue I and brings the Donatus-Suetonius chronicle into proper perspective. Flintoff (4) examines the status of quo (Eclogue 4, 8) and alters Mynor's punctuation in O.C.T. to nascente, puero quo, implying an absolute construction or an ablative of circumstance. Schmidt (5, 9) provides much food for thought in his sensitive study of the pastoral poems; his article contrasts the Theocritean 'retreat' from the city with the Vergilian 'return' to the urban, political context. Bardon (7) examines political themes in bucolic poetry — civil war, ruler-divinity assimilation, the golden age, and libertas. Rutledge (6) finds surrealist elements in Eclogue 10 with its montage of scenes, its circular design, and its blend of dream and reality. Coleman's précis (8) foreshadows his forthcoming text and commentary.

GEORGICS

12. L. Castano, 'Il commento di Probo alle Georgiche di Virgilio nel codice posseduto dal Poliziano', Helikon 9-10 (1969-70) 524-73.

13. Marianne McDonald, 'Acies: Virgil Georgics 1. 395', CP 68 (1973) 203-5.

14. J.R.C. Martyn, ed., Cicero and Virgil. Studies in Honour of Harold Hunt. Amsterdam, 1972; 'Virgilius Satiricus', 169-91.

15. A.G. McKay, 'Vergil's Glorification of Italy (Georgics II, 136-74), Hunt Studies (14) 149-68.

16. A. Pieri, 'L'Epodo 2 di Orazio e le Georgiche', Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica 44 (1972) 244-66.

17. P. Brind'Amour, 'Virgile et le dressage des chevaux', Phoenix 26 (1972) 187-8.

18. Alice Gervais, 'A propos de la 'Peste' d'Athenes: Thucydide et la littérature de l'épidémie', Bull. de l'Assoc. G. Budé. Lettres d'Humanité 31. Ser. 4. No. 4 (1972) 396-429.

19. Marcel Detienne, 'Orphée au miel', Quaderni Urbinati 12 (1971) 7-23.

20. Aya Betensky. The Literary Use of Animals in Lucretius' De Rerum Natura and Virgil's Georgics. Diss., Yale University, 1972.

21. Vinzenz Buchheit. Der Anspruch des Dichters in Vergils Georgika. Dichtertum und Heilsweg. Darmstadt, 1972.

22. Robert M. Wilhelm. The Georgics. A Study of the Emergence of Augustus as Moderator Rei Publicae. Diss., The Ohio State University, 1971.

23. G. Zalateo, 'Da Omero a Virgilio', Atene e Roma 16 (1971) 120-6.

McDonald (13) treats Georgics 1, 395 to close analysis and translates the verse as 'the sharp (projected) brilliance of starlight'. Martyn, editor of the Hunt Festschrift (14), shows that, in two sections of the second Georgic, Vergil developed a truly satirical attack on those perennial victims of the satirist's lash, greed, luxury and vain ambition. McKay (15) offers a structural analysis and commentary on Vergil's Laudes Italiae. Pieri (16), with reference to Georgics 2, 458 ff., interprets the Vergilian allusions in Horace's Second Epode as an evocation and a tribute. Brind'Amour (17) substitutes pransique for prensique in Georgics 3, 208 and supports his reading with complementary notices from Xenophon and Varro. Gervais (18) brings the plague of Georgics 3 into a larger perspective. Detienne (19) approaches the Orion-Eurydice-Aristaeus 'triangle' from the standpoint of comparative religion and sheds fresh light on the symbolic associations of honey and the Aristaeus epyllion. Zalateo (23) treats Georgics 1, 382: densis . . . alis as a derivative but altered expression.

AENEID

24. Jonathan Foster, 'Aeneidea', PVS 11 (1971-2) 77-9.
25. Henning Mørland, 'Zue einigen Stellen in der Aeneis', Symb. Osl. 48 (1973) 7-23.
26. George Sanderlin, 'Vergil's Protection of Aeneas in Aeneid II', CW 66 (1972) 82-4.
27. C.E. Murgia, 'The Authenticity of the Helen Episode in Aen. 2.567-88', Calif. Studies in Class. Antiquity 4 (1971) 203-17.
28. R. Renehan, 'Pseudo-Vergil's Ultrix Flamma: A Problem in Linguistic Possibilities', CP 68 (1973) 197-202.
29. J. Foster, 'Virgil, Aeneid II 446 f.', CR 22 (1972) 304.
30. A.A. Barrett, 'Dido's Child: a note on Aeneid 4. 327-330', Maia 24 (1973) 51-3.
31. A.J. Boyle, 'Homo immemor. Book 4 and its thematic ramifications', Ramus 1 (1972) 113-51 (Published by the Dept. of Classical Studies, Monash University, Clayton, Victoria, Australia).
32. Kenneth McLeish, 'Dido, Aeneas, and the Concept of Pietas', G & R 19 (1972) 127-35.
33. G.H. Gellie, 'Juno and Venus in Aeneid IV', Hunt Studies (14) 138-48.
34. Sister Johanna Glazewski, 'The Function of Vergil's Funeral Games', CW 66 (1972) 85-96.
35. F.J. Lelievre, 'Two Supernatural Incidents in the Aeneid', PVS 11 (1971-2) 74-7.
36. G. Thaniel, 'Ecce . . . Palinurus', Acta Classica 15 (1972) 149-52.
37. R.D. Williams, 'The Pageant of Roman Heroes – Aeneid 6. 756-853', Hunt Studies (14) 207-17.
38. R.D. Williams, ed. The Aeneid of Virgil: Books 7-12. Macmillan, London, 1973.
39. Paul F. Burke, Jr., Characterization in the Aeneid. Diss., Stanford University, 1972.
40. John W. Zarker, 'The Hercules Theme in the Aeneid', Vergilius 18 (1972) 34-48.
41. G.J. Fitzgerald, 'Nisus and Euryalus: A Paradigm of Futile Behaviour and the Tragedy of Youth', Hunt Studies (14) 114-37.
42. R.P. Winnington-Ingram, 'Digna atque indigna relatu: Observations on Aeneid IX', PVS 11 (1971-2) 61-74.
43. Justin Glenn, 'The Fall of Mezentius', Vergilius 18 (1972) 10-15.
44. P. Colaclidès, 'Note sur un emploi de fortune chez Virgile', Glotta 51 (1973) 140-2.
45. D.T. Stephens, 'L'Home absurde', Bull. de l'Assoc. G. Budé. Lettres d'Humanité 31. Ser. 4. No. 2 (1972) 157 ff.
46. H. MacL. Currie, 'Pietas – Leal-love', Vergilius 18 (1972) 33.
47. Gilbert Highet. The Speeches in Virgil's Aeneid. Princeton, 1972.
48. Kenneth Quinn, 'Did Virgil Fail?', Hunt Studies (14) 192-206.
49. H.L. Tracy, 'Two Footnotes on Horace 3, 3, 37-8', Classical News &

Views/Echos du Monde Classique 16 (1972) 92-3.

50. Antonie Wlosok, rev. Brigitte Grassmann-Fischer, Die Prodigien in Vergils Aeneis (Munich, 1966), Gnomon 45 (1973) 245-9.

Foster (24) argues that Venus' account of Sychaeus' murder by Dido's brother Pygmalion (Aeneid 1, 343-64) was influenced by the classic Mostellaria episode, and that Anna's words to Dido (Aeneid 4, 31-3), Veneris . . . praemia recall Lucretius, De Rerum Natura 3, 899 (praemia vitae); Optima Dido (Aeneid 4, 291, possibly echoes Lucretius' uxor optima (3, 894-5). Mørland (25) analyses Aeneid 2, 394; 261 ff.; 114 ff.; 434 ff.; and 5, 840, and offers fresh, often startling interpretations. He detects links between the Menoetes (Aeneid 5, 159-83) and the Palinurus episodes (5, 833 ff.). Sanderlin (26) excuses Aeneas' security in Aeneid 2 on the ground that he is an observer of the Trojan tragedy, a time and history past redemption. Murgia (27) (cf. G.P. Goold, HSCP 74 (1970) 101-68) argues that the Helen episode in Aeneid 2, 567-88 is not the work of Vergil. Renehan (28) adopts Murgia's position but accepts the feasibility of Aeneid 2, 587 as a linguistic possibility. Foster (29) translates quando ultima cernunt. Barrett (30) detects similarity between the Aeneas-Dido and Caesar-Cleopatra liaisons. Vergil supports Octavian's cause and so suggests a parallel between Aeneas and Caesar but, unlike Caesar, who fathered Caesarion on Cleopatra, Aeneas does not have a son by his foreign mistress. Boyle's article (31) treats Ideology and Actuality: Daedalus and the Ivory Gate, Ideology and the Individual: Distraction and 'Aeneas immemor', The Promises of Empire: 'Fama' and the Golden Bough, and 'Homo Immemor': Aeneas and the Inevitability of Human Failure. McLeish (32) argues for symmetry and a logical pattern in Aeneas' relationship with Dido; the hero's pietas is expanded, strengthened and developed through his affaire with the Carthaginian Queen. Sister Johanna Glazewski (34) examines the conventions of epic funeral games and indicates how Vergil uses the genre to support the basic theme of Aeneid 1, 33. Lelievre (35) treats Aeneid 5, 636-8 from a literal standpoint: Iris, masquerading as Beroe, claims that as a mortal she heard Cassandra, but, in a mortal guise, no credence could be attached to Cassandra's words. The omen in Aeneid 12, 244-6, Juturna's sign, which Tolumnius interprets favorably for the Latin cause, is paralleled by the omen of the twelve swans earlier, and Venus' interpretation, favorable to the Trojans. So both omens, in an impartial reading, suggest the outcome decreed by destiny, the victory of Aeneas and the Trojans, and the defeat of ferocity. Thaniel (36) explores the problematic links between the Palinurus episodes of Aeneid 5 and 6, and rejects Palinurus as magister of the Lycian ship in Aeneid 1 in favor of Leucaspis (Aeneid 6, 334). R.D. Williams (37) with a prefatory discussion of general structure, considers the presentation of the individual sections of the heroic parade in the Underworld. Williams' second volume of his Macmillan text, with introduction and commentary (38) offers bright new incentive to renewed study of the last six books in the classroom. Vergilian studies owe much to his indefatigable industry and good example. Zarker (40) assembles every allusion to Hercules in the epic and comments on them. He examines the allusions both as a unifying element in the Aeneid and as factors relating to the characterization of Aeneas. Winnington-Ingram (42) offers a close consideration of the taunting speech of Numanus Remulus which is answered by the bowshot of Ascanius and rejects the idea that the speech and the incident are a tiresome irrelevancy. He also examines the celebrated apostrophe to Nisus and Euryalus (Aeneid 9, 446-9) and argues that Nisus and Euryalus were betrayed by emotions closely bound up with courage and energy, both requisites for heroic action; Aeneas is betrayed at the close by comparable human weakness to commit an act of savagery that it was his mission to terminate. Glenn (43) assesses the pathos, piety and gravitas of Mezentius, reliant on vis but doomed by the gods and destiny, victim of a thelos aner. Colaclidès (44) studies Aeneid 12, 920: sortitus fortunam oculis. Stephens (45) assesses the career of Turnus. Horace's Roman Odes have clear Vergilian overtones. Tracy (49) detects mutual concern for concordia ordinum and consensus Italiae in their works. Highet (47) provides a masterly analysis of all the speeches in the epic, employing statistical techniques and other scholarly methods. He classifies the speeches, identifies their models in earlier Greek and Latin literature, and offers an analysis of their structure. Their importance in the portrayal of character is paramount. Currie (46) emphasizes loyalty and love as central to pietas, and argues that leal (Scottish)-love best conveys the several notions investing pietas. Quinn's provocative paper (48) reviews the evidence for supposing that Vergil thought his epic a failure and conjectures what reasons Vergil had for believing he had failed; he then considers how far one should accept his reasons as a valid criticism of the poem. Quinn speculates on the original design of the epic and the poet's travails as he reworked his early prose version into the final version where the shifts are sometimes evident and so lend some element of confusion. The final poem, which Vergil meant to revise, was the expression of a mature, civilized sensibility but one which it was impossible to get right. Wlosok (50) reviews Grassmann-Fischer's study of prodigies in the Aeneid with good sense and perception.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

51. A.A. Barrett, 'Donatus and the Date of the Culex', CP 67 (1972) 280-7.

52. M.L. Clarke, 'The Date of the Ciris', CP 68 (1973) 119-21.

53. Mauro d'Eufemia, 'Alcune osservazioni sui carmi dello pseudo-Virgilio', Rivista di Cultura Classica e Medioevale 14 (1972) 122-31.

54. Dieter Güntzschel. Beiträge zur Datierung des Culex. Munster, 1972.

55. G. Lee. Allusion, Parody and Imitation. Hull, 1971.

56. R. O.A.M. Lyne, 'The recentiores of the Ciris', Proc. Cambridge Philol. Soc. 198 (1972) 43-9.

Apologists, detractors and detectives continue to struggle gamely with the Appendix Vergiliana. Barrett's article (51) takes a reasonable and properly critical view of the Suetonius-Donatus testimony. Clarke (52) argues that the author of the Ciris (139 A.D.) was related to L. Valerius Messalla Thrasea Priscus, consul: in 196 A.D. d'Eufemia (53) detects Vergilian borrowings in the Culex, Ciris, and Aetna, and offers rough dating. Güntzschel (54) concludes that the Culex was written between A.D. 12 and 54, most likely during the early years of Tiberius' reign. The Culex, he argues, is indebted to Manilius and Ovid and was a source for Calpurnius Siculus.

GENERAL STUDIES, CLASSICAL TRADITION, ARCHAEOLOGY

57. Francis Berry, Thoughts on Poetic Time (Jackson Knight Memorial Lecture) Abingdon-on-Thames, 1972.

58. J.F. Burgess, 'Pietas in Virgil and Statius', PVS 11 (1971-2) 48-61.

59. G. Carlozzo, 'Motivi virgiliani di morte', Atti dell'Acad. di scienze, lettere e arti di Palermo, Ser. 4. Vol. 31 (1970-71) 1-40.

60. William M. Carke, Intentional Alliteration and Rhyme in Vergil and Ovid. Diss., University of North Carolina, 1972.

61. Robert Coleman, 'Verse Scansion and the Analysis of Latin Hexameter Rhythm', Didaskalos 4 (1972) 192-205.

62. Mary Conway, 'The Significance of Vergil Today', CO 50 (1972) 1-2.

63. John Ferguson, 'Catullus and Virgil', PVS 11 (1971-2) 25-47.

64. Vladimir E. Georgiev, 'Troer und Etrusker. Der historischen Kern des Aeneas-Sage', Philologus 116 (1972) 93-7.

65. Michael Grant. Roman Myths. New York, 1971. (s.v. Aeneas. 44-90).

66. Roland Hampe. Sperlonga und Vergil. Mainz am Rhein, 1972.

67. Giampietro Marconi, 'Il Testamento di Virgilio', Studi Latini (Rome, 1972) 143-205.

68. Jose Oroz, 'Virgilio y los valores del clasicismo y del humanismo', Helmantica 74 (1973) 209-79.

69. R.F. Paget, 'Letter to Editor', Vergilius 18 (1972) 31-2.

70. Zoja Pavlovskis, Man in an Artificial Landscape. The Marvels of Civilization in Imperial Roman Literature. Mnemosyne, Supplement, 25. 1973.

71. K. Quinn, V. Pöschl, Martin D. Synder, Jerry Clack, 'Vergil Engaged', CW 66 (1972) 65-75.

72. M.S. Silk, 'Virgil and English Poetry: Some Thoughts on Affinities', PVS 11 (1971-2) 1-25.

73. David Singleton, 'Juvenal VI, 1-20, and some ancient attitudes to the Golden Age', G & R 19 (1972) 151 ff.

74. P. Sommella, 'Heroon di Enea a Lavinium. Recenti Scavi a Pratica di Mare', Rend. Pontificia Accad. Ser. 2, Vol. 44 (1971-2) 47-74.

75. William C. Waterhouse, 'Extreme and Mean Ration in Vergil?', Phoenix 26 (1972) 369-76.

76. Antonie Wlosok, 'Vergil in der neueren Forschung', Gymnasium 80 (1973) 129-51.

77. W.T. Zyla, 'A Ukrainian Version of the Aeneid: Ivan Kotljarev'skyj's Enejida', CJ 67 (1972) 193-7.

Berry (57) treats the subject of time as handled in dramatic or narrative contexts by Vergil, Milton, Shakespeare, T.S. Eliot, and others. Burgess (58) detects important differences in the role of pietas in the Aeneid and Thebaid and argues that the Aeneid is a poem of guarded optimism, that the Thebaid is an epic of unmitigated despair. Fata and Pietas are on the same side in the Vergilian epic but are inimical in the Thebaid. Coleman (61) analyses the scansion of Aeneid 1, 1-7 with homodyne marks and pausal points, instead of caesural marks, to give structural shape to the lines. Ferguson (63) shows that Catullus' essay in hexameters, the Peleus and Thetis, exercised the greatest influence on Vergil, but that there are traces of knowledge of all branches of Catullus' work. Vergil had a limited number of favorites, which equate with ours, and there is often a lightening of the customary dignity of Vergil's verse by conversational elements which Catullus made his own. Georgiev (64) treats the questionable equation, Trojans = Etruscans, with philological zeal and with allusions to Vergil's Trojan epic and the Etruscan content. Hampe (66) reviews the mythological program of the sculptures found in Tiberius' celebrated Marine Grotto at Sperlonga and discards the slogan, 'Odyssey in Marble', in favor of Vergil's Aeneid as the epic which sculptors sought not merely to illustrate but to surpass in grandeur of conception. The mariner grasping the aphlaston of the sinking ship is identified with Palinurus. Oroz (68) extols Vergil's pure humanism and genuine classicism in a widely ranging article. The late Robert Paget (69) responds to criticism of his article on Bacoli's Piscina Mirabilis by R.M. Henderson in Vergilius 17 (1971) 40-3. Recent autopsy strengthens the conviction that the Piscina was designed as a cistern. Quinn, Pöschl, Snyder and Clack (71) offer a spirited discussion of Vergil's faults and merits. Pavlovskis (70) treats the poetic ekphrasis, on architecture and engineering and cunningly constructed landscapes, in post-Vergilian writing. Statius, Pliny the Younger, and their imitators, Ausonius, Rutilius Namatianus, and Sidonius Apollinaris are masters of this new literary device. Vergilian scholars will find much of interest in this enthralling study. Singleton (73) brings Vergil's attitude to the Golden Age into a larger perspective. Sommella's article (74) studies and interprets the tomb-heroon near the thirteen altars at Pratica di Mare. The Aeneas sanctuary, probably fourth century date, provides important testimony to the early strength of the Trojan legend in Latium, and in particular to the hero's role in the settlement at Lavinium. Waterhouse (75), working from a background of mathematics at Cornell University, and in a context of ancient mathematical thought, argues that Duckworth's thesis on mathematical structure and proportion in Vergil is extremely improbable. Duckworth's data, under Waterhouse's scrutiny, seem to show no emphasis on Fibonacci numbers, no substantial clustering at .618, and no preference for good approximations over bad ones; they behave more like a random collection of fractions in the range considered. Waterhouse contributes heavily to the negative views of other scholars, Dalzell, Williams, Clarke, and Bews, in English and Canadian circles. Wlosok (76) assesses the contributions and advances in Vergilian criticism made recently by Otis, Parry, Putnam, Quinn and others. Zyla (77) commends Kotljarewskyj's poetical travesty of the Aeneid which transforms the classical heroes into Ukrainian Cossacks set amid colorful portrayals of Ukrainian life.

ADDENDA

78. Justin Glenn, 'Mezentius and Polyphemus', AJP 92 (1971) 129-55.
79. P.A. Hansen, 'Ille Ego Qui Quondam . . . Once Again', CQ 22 (1972) 139-48.
80. L. Richardson, Jr., 'Catullus 4 and Catalepton Again', AJP 93 (1972) 215-22.
81. G. Salanitro, 'Una nota sull' Appendix Vergiliana', Athenaeum 50 (1972) 415-7.
82. G.N. Sandy, 'A Note on Virgil, Catalepton 13, 6', Mnem. 16 (1973).
83. H. Snijder, 'Virgil, Aeneid IV, 436', Athenaeum 50 (1972) 417-20.
84. H. Wagenvoort, 'The Journey of the Souls of the Dead to the Isles of the Blest', Mnem. 24 (1971) 113-61.

A.G. McKay

McMaster University