

(VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY (1973-74

Author(s): A. G. McKAY

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 1974, No. 20 (1974), pp. 33-44

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/41591729>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY (1973-74)

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the twelfth in the Vergilius series. Classical World 68:1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964 – 1973. The Survey may be obtained from the offices of Classical World and from the Treasurer of The Vergilian Society, Inc. A list of Addenda to the ten-year survey appears as a Supplementum to the present survey. The editor of the "Vergilian Bibliography" welcomes reprints of articles and bibliographical notices for inclusion in subsequent bibliographies. The mailing address is: Department of Classics, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, L8S 4M2.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

1. Cipriano Conti, 'Rassegna di studi sul' Appendix Vergiliana,' BollStud-Lat. 3 (1973) 351-92.
2. Harald Fuchs, 'Aetna 255/257,' Hermes 101 (1973) 256.
3. Gerald N. Sandy, 'A Note on Virgil, Catalepton 13,6,' Mnem 26 (1973) 286-8.

Conti's survey article treats authenticity, editions, and scholarship attaching to Catalepton (Epigrammata et Priapea) and Culex. A second article (forthcoming) will examine the remainder of the collection. Sandy identifies Catalepton 13 as a traditional flagitatio and defends the manuscript readings assim (adsim).

ECLOGUES

4. William Berg, Early Virgil (London 1974).
5. Eleanor W. Leach, Vergil's Eclogues (Ithaca, 1974).
6. James B. Pearce, Themes and Motifs in Classical Pastoral Poetry. Diss., University of Texas, Austin. Summary in DA 33 (1973) 5149A-5150A.
7. H. J. Mette, 'Vergil, Bucol. 4,' RhM 116 (1973) 71-8.

Two new studies mark important departures in the interpretation of Vergil's pastoral poems. Berg's volume, the outgrowth of a doctoral dissertation (Princeton 1966. Summary in DA 27 (1967) 3855A), attempts to define ancient pastoral in the earlier tradition and in the Vergilian adaptation. Daphnis becomes a central heroic figure, incorporating qualities of earlier literary and religious traditions, a future hero and hero-lover. The crisis behind E.9 and 1 is personal; Octavian's intervention resolved Vergil's dilemma as poet and restored his confidence as man and as artist. The puer of E. 4, born into a pastoral context, is fated to reappear in the poet's later works. Berg deals with relationships between the Eclogues, and with unifying symbols, and above all, with the pastoral hero, who matures from lovesick shepherd into the elegiac hero Gallus. But the new hero of E. 4 remained Vergil's main concern in his later writing. Berg supplies a revised text and new translation. The translation is designed to reproduce the 'rustic' ingenuousness of the original through a modern American style where the pedestrian tone may match the simplicity of Vergil's vocabulary.

Eleanor Leach's volume is concerned with landscape and the relationship of landscape to the myth of natural freedom. (Both volumes are properly concerned with the poet's 'place' of inspiration and creation but the arguments and the conclusions differ.) Mrs. Leach rejects the oft-stated interpretation of hostility between the pastoral and the Roman worlds. Theocritan models notwithstanding, Vergil's poems are invested with a distinctive Roman atmosphere and symbolism. Cato, Varro, and Vitruvius shed helpful light on Vergil's portrayals of innocence and landscape, and on his poetic imagination. Landscape paintings are adduced skilfully and persuasively to support and enlarge the argument. Vergil's pastoral landscapes emerge as symbolic patterns, as poetic compositions which incorporate images of the natural world. And behind the landscapes resides a philosophy, a personal estimate of man's condition and of his place in the environment. Vergil's Corydon and Damon seek escape into a world of unspoiled innocence; Vergil is more resolute and abides with the world of experience, and with the complexity of contemporary civilization.

Pearce's dissertation provides a thematic (or motif) index to the corpus of ancient bucolic poetry. Mette aligns the puer of E. 4 with the child of Octavia and Antony, a child with traits of both Antony and Octavian.

GEORGICS

8. P. V. Cova, 'Arte allusiva in Georg. IV, 471-84,' BollStudLat 3 (1973) 281-303.

9. W. R. Nethercut, 'Vergil's De Rerum Natura,' Ramus 2 (1973) 41-52.

Nethercut's searching study traces Lucretian elements in Vergil's Georgics – with important implications for Vergil's poetic creativity, philosophy, and versifier's craft. Cova traces connections between G. 4 and A. 6, both responsive and progressive.

AENEID

10. Theodore Crane, 'Hunter and Hunted in Aeneid 7-12,' CB 50 (1973) 21-25.

11. J. R. Dunkle, 'The Hunter and Hunting in the Aeneid,' Ramus 2 (1973) 127-42.

12. J. William Hunt, Forms of Glory: Structure and Sense in Virgil's Aeneid (Carbondale & Edwardsville, Illinois, 1973.)

13. A. Perutelli, 'Genesi e significato della Virgils epische Technik di Richard Heinze,' Maia 25 (1973) 293-316.

14. JoAnn Stachniw, 'Labor as a Key to the Aeneid,' CB 50 (1974) 49-52.

15. W. R. Nethercut, 'The Mysteries in the Aeneid,' Vergilius 19 (1973) 28-32.

16. Eugene Vance, 'Warfare and structure of thought in Virgil's Aeneid,' Quaderni Urbinati 15 (1973) 11-62.

17. R. D. Williams, Aeneas and the Roman Hero ('Inside the Roman World') (Basingstoke and London, 1973).

18. Walter Wimmel, 'Hirtenkrieg' und arkadisches Rom. Reduktionsmedien in Vergils Aeneis (München, 1973).
19. E. L. Harrison 'Why did Venus wear boots? Some reflections on Aeneid 1, 314,' PVS 12 (1972-73) 10-25.
20. Nicholas Reed, 'The gates of sleep in Aeneid 6,' CQ 23 (1973) 311-25.
21. P. T. Eden, 'The Salii on the shield of Aeneas: Aeneid 8, 663-6,' RhM 116 (1973) 78-83.
22. Gilbert Highet, 'A dissertation on roast pig,' CW 67 (1973) 14-15.
23. Alessandro Perutelli, 'Un'interpretazione dell' VIII libro dell' Eneide,' Maia 25 (1973) 67-71.
24. D. Wiesen, 'The Pessimism of the Eighth Aeneid,' Latomus 32 (1973) 737-65.
25. David West, 'The deaths of Hector and Turnus,' G&R 21 (1974) 21-31.
26. T. R. Bryce, 'The Dido-Aeneas Relationship: A Re-Examination,' CW 67 (1974) 257-69.
27. Mary Crawford Clawsey, 'Aeneas and Lavinia,' Vergilius 19 (1973) 21.
28. Bradford Lewis, 'The Rape of Troy: Infantile Perspective in Book II of the Aeneid,' Arethusa 7 (1974) 103-13.
29. Douglas J. Stewart, 'Aeneas the Politician,' Antioch Review 32 (1974) 649-64.
30. W. Fuchs, 'Die Bildgeschichte der Flucht des Aeneas,' Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt I, 4 (1973) 615-32.
31. G. Karl Galinsky, 'Troiae qui primus ab oris . . . (Aen. I.1),' Gymnasium 81 (1974) 182-200.
32. Nicholas Horsfall, 'Virgil's Roman Chronography: A Reconsideration,' CQ 24 (1974) 111-115.
33. Rory B. Egan, 'Aeneas at Aeneia and Vergil's Aeneid,' Pacific Coast Philology 9 (1974) 37-47.
34. Nicholas Horsfall, 'Corythus: the return of Aeneas in Virgil and his sources,' JRS 63 (1973) 68-79.
35. Nicholas Horsfall, 'Turnus ad portas,' Latomus 33 (1974) 80-86.
36. A. G. McKay, 'Apollo Cumanus,' Vergilius 19 (1973) 51-63.
37. James Russell, 'Calchas tectus. An Interpretation of Aeneid II, 126,' Latomus 32 (1973) 818-23.
38. N. Shiel, 'A 'Quotation' from the Aeneid on the coinage of Carausius,' PVS 12 (1972-73) 51-3.
39. Jocelyn P. Small, 'Aeneas and Turnus on Late Etruscan Funerary Urns,' AJA 78 (1974) 49-54.
40. Bertha Tilly, 'Some Excursions into Vergil's Sabine Country,' Vergilius 19 (1973) 2-19.

Hunting and warfare are analogous to the poet's mind. Crane (10) and Dunkle (11) concern themselves with the motif of the hunt and animal imagery in their studies of the human conflict, poetic imagery, and conceptions of heroism. Hunt (12) studies the epic design and formal elements that qualify the poem's theme of glory. The function of gifts, prizes, and trophies, the gods as superplot, and images of primary importance (land, sea, glory, and shadow) are major concerns. Perutelli's critique of Heinze's influential study of Vergilian epic is sage and informative. Stachniw's concentrates on the hero's labores as a key word. Nethercut (15) is concerned with three questions: the death of Misenus (and of Palinurus) preceding Aeneas' entry into the Underworld; the departure of Aeneas through the gate of false dreams; and Turnus' boulder (A. 12, 896-907) and Homeric counterparts. Vance deals with the interior states of Vergil's heroes within the framework of the narrative. Aeneas' righteous anger against Turnus at the close awakens painful, inescapable memories of violence in Rome's past; cultures, like individuals, must learn self-forgiveness to carry on. Williams' book (17) is designed for schools. It accents the ideals of the newly-founded Empire as reflected in the Aeneid, the problems and advantages of world-destiny, and offers a characteristically sane and perceptive appreciation of the epic story and Vergil's poetry. Students are also attuned to Vergil's private voice in the characterization and stories of Dido, Turnus, and to Juno's fateful role. Wimmel's study of A. 5-8 underscores its Alexandrian nature within Homeric parentheses. Pastoral and rural elements are minor motifs in the ultimate 'quartet' of conflicts. Wimmel's monograph is thought-provoking and highly instructive. Venus' boots raise several questions which Harrison (19) endeavours to answer: (1) Why did Vergil disguise Venus in this scene? (2) Why did he choose the Diana-like huntress for her disguise? (3) Why did he make the disguise only partial with Venus revealed at the close? and (4) why did he dress Venus in boots rather than sandals? The answers indicate that the scene is no sterile episode but one intricately involved with the Dido tragedy. Reed (20) argues that because Deiphobe and Aeneas are real people (not true umbræ) they leave the Underworld by the ivory gate which is reserved for false shades. They are deceptive (falsæ) in the sense that they are living persons. Controversy continues over the 13 scenes on Aeneas' shield. Eden argues that Vergil adheres to a per annos, per dies sequence in his selection of the first nine scenes to represent 700 years of history. Eden is less concerned with artistic examples than with chronological progression. The text does seem directional: 626, res Italas Romanorum triumphos, and 629, pugna-taque in ordine bella. Highet's entertaining article (22) deals with Vergil's revulsion for sacrificial description (A. 8, 81-85); the white sow and thirty piglets called for extended butchering. Because pork and white wine are prelude to the passage to Pallanteum, Highet constructs a line to launch their voyage: ocius ad naves: fugat indigestio somnum! Perutelli and Wiesen shed fresh light on the crucial eighth book. Wiesen argues that the underlying colours are dark, although there is no narrative of combat (save Hercules' encounter with Cacus, and the menace of Mezentius) and no attractive characters die. West (25) studies the deaths of Hector and Turnus from the standpoint of organization and content. He argues against the anti-Aeneanism of Putnam and Quinn on Aeneas' final act and prefers the assessments of Anderson and Binder. Heroic times and Augustan politics were less concerned with the morality of a champion's death than with the event itself.

Bryce (26) considers the nature of the Dido-Aeneas relationship and the underlying tragedy. Two incompatible persons, subject to suspicions, fears, resentment, despair, and misunderstanding, could only experience a meaningless, unproductive relationship. Disaster was the certain outcome. Clawsey's poem explores the adjustment between Trojan victor and Latin bride. Lewis' article (28) deals with Aeneas' dual nature, passive impotence and frenetic activity. 'His vision of the rape of Priam's castle is an encoding of an obsessive infantile fear: the threat of the father to kill or annihilate the mother, and by doing so, to kill the child in the process.' Stewart (29) maintains that the essential subject of the epic is the 'education' of a political leader. Vergil saw the acceptance of political leadership as a crucial denial of natural human feelings; eventually the feelings rebel and the crisis tends to destroy the characters of all but the most stalwart. Fuchs (30) is concerned with the archaic and classical artistic versions of the flight of Aeneas, with Hellenistic types and the tradition in Roman poetry. The Western forms, both numismatic and sculptural (Forum Augustum) are relevant to Vergil's 'group'. Galinsky's article (31) is a revised version of his earlier offering (Latomus 28 (1969) 3-18), treating the achievement of Vergil in composing an Italian epic wherein Aeneas would replace Ulysses. Horsfall (32) studies the Vergilian date for the Alban Kings which conflicts with the common historical tradition. The intention is clear: to yield a symmetrical progression of numbers 3-30-300 which provide a magical or mystical total. Horsfall suggests that 88 BC (AUC 666) affected Vergil's reconstruction (cf. Plut. Sulla, 7, 3). Egan (33) studies the variant tradition whereby Aeneas on the Thermaic Gulf was the terminus of Aeneas' wanderings, his ultimate settlement, and deathplace. He advances Konon, Diêgêseis 46, as testimonium to the alternate legend, and argues that the funeral of Polydorus was Vergil's response to the account of a funeral which was prominent in the Aeneas tradition in Thrace. These and other factors in the epic narrative suggest that Vergil may have had access to a Thracian Aeneid. Horsfall (34) analyses the literary and historical tradition relating to the Trojan 'return' to Italy and the migration to Troy from Corythus (Tarquinii); and (35) finds conscious reminiscence of Hannibal's assault on Rome in 211 BC in the opening of A. 9. Russell (37) detects hints of the story of Iphigenia's sacrifice in Sinon's account (A. 2, 119ff.) and illustrates Calchas' veiled head (tectus) with the figure of Agamemnon in a well-known wall painting taken from the Pompeian house of the Tragic Poet. Small (39) studies the Aeneas-Turnus combat in association with the Eteocles-Polyneices combats on Etruscan funerary urns. McKay (36) concentrates on the Augustan alteration of the Apollo temple on the lower terrace of the Cumaeen acropolis. The new triadic design, the monumentality of the porticus, and the use of cloverleaf columns at points of greatest strain, are noteworthy. The renovated temple was no doubt part of the Augustan emphasis on the savior-God Apollo as evidenced most notably at Actium and on the Palatine Hill. Vergil's account of the Daedalic temple probably reflects contemporary regard for Augustan monuments. Bertha Tilly (40) offers a first-hand account of the towns and districts of the Sabine catalogue: Amiternum, Cures, Eretum, Mutusca, Nomentum, the Velinus River, Rosea (or Rosia), Casperia (mod. Aspra?), Nursia (mod. Norcia), and the Allia River (mod. Fosso Bettina). Possible sources for the Sabine catalogue include Agrippa's Destinatio et Commentarii (Plin. NH., 3, 2, 17).

VERGIL AND HIS MILIEU

41. R. D. Williams, 'Virgil Today,' PVS 12 (1972-73) 25-35.
42. P. L. Smith, 'Pathetic Vignettes in Homer and Virgil,' Proc. Pacific Northwest Conference on Foreign Languages 24 (1973) 203-8.
43. Charles Segal, "Like winds and winged dream", a note on Virgil's development,' CJ 69 (1973) 97-102.
44. Georg Luck, 'Virgil and the Mystery Religions,' AJP 94 (1973) 147-66.
45. José Oroz Reta, 'La postura religiosa de Virgilio,' Helmantica 76 (1974) 83-179.
46. V. Buchheit, 'Vergilische Geschichtsdeutung,' Grazer Beiträge 1 (1973) 23-50.
47. F. Cupaiuolo, Itinerario della poesia latina del I secolo dell'impero (Napoli 1973) 179-217.
48. A. van Rooy, 'Imitatio of Vergil, Eclogues in Horace, Satires, Book I,' Acta Classica 16 (1973) 69-88.

Williams' Presidential address to the Virgil Society explores reasons for Vergil's lasting popularity: his variety of poetic mood and style, his ability to juxtapose different aspects of human behaviour so as to show sympathy for widely contrasting attitudes of life. Contemporary appreciation realizes the many-sidedness of the poet's genius and qualities. Segal (43) deals with a recurrent motif in A. 2, 790-95; 5, 738-40, and 6, 700-702. Earlier usage is intensified, and there is an evident progression, an artistic maturity, in the movement from tangible aspects to a more evocative, fugitive event. Luck (44) restudies Warburton's suggestion (1837) that Aeneas' descent recalls the procedures, stages, and 'illumination' of initiation into the Eleusinian Mysteries. Orphic elements, detected by others, were assimilated into the Mysteries and are entirely relevant to the Vergilian descent. Luck's article brings fresh attention to the richness and complexity of Vergil's art. Oroz Reta (45) treats political aspects of Roman religion, ritual, cult of the dead, sacrificial practices, gods and heroes, and Magnus Saeclorum Ordo; a comprehensive, useful study. Cupaiuolo (47) examines the political and historical background of Vergil's writings. Van Rooy (48) argues that Horace borrowed the concept of an organised book of 10 satires, a bipartite division marked by two introductory poems (1, and 6), and imitated themes and expressions of (mainly) the corresponding number in the E-book. (Satires 1, 2, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10).

STYLE, LANGUAGE, METER

49. Elfrieda Frank, 'Texture in Latin Epic Poetry,' CB 50 (1974) 69-72.
- Frank's article accents Vergil's (and other epic poets') concern to effect a correlation between content and texture in composition.

INTERPRETATION AND TEXT CRITICISM

50. A. S. Gratwick, 'Corydon and his prospects,' CR 23 (1973) 10.
51. Anna Elissa Radke, 'Zu Vergil, Ecl. III, 109, 110,' RhM 116 (1973) 143-9.

52. L. M. Fosse, 'A note on the interpretation of Vergil's Aen. II, 485,' SO 49 (1973) 93-94.

53. A. W. H. Adkins, 'Meaning, Using, Translating, and Editing,' G&R 21 (1974) 37-50.

54. W. A. Camps, 'Critical and Exegetical Notes,' AJP 94 (1973) 131-46 (esp. 145f.).

55. M. L. Clarke, 'Three Notes on Virgil,' PVS 12 (1972-73) 48-50.

56. Theodore Crane, 'A note on Aeneas' "Human Sacrifice" Aeneid 10. 517-20,' CW 67 (1973) 176-77.

Gratwick, on E. 2, 1-2, alters line 2 from nec quid speraret habebat to nec qui speraret habebat, 'nor had he whereby he might hope', i.e., he had no token of reciprocated affection, his prospects were nil. Radke offers a new reading, meruit (for metuet in E. 3, 110). Fosse (52) regards penetralia ('the inner chambers') as inanimate subject of vident in A. 2, 485. Adkins (pages 51-45) offers critical commentary and translation of A. 4, 1-8. Camps (54) (on A. 6, 739-47) equates exinde (743) with ex iis or ex nobis, thereby preferring the less common selective sense to the temporal. The implication is then, properly, that a chosen few are exempted from purgation and proceed directly to Elysium. Clarke (55), on Catalepton 5, 1-7, regards Silius, Tarquinius, and Varro (line 3) as pupils rather than teachers in Vergil's school of rhetoric; on E. 3, 76-79, he reverts to Heyne's explanation of 78-79 and punctuates line 79 (contra Mynors): et 'longum, formose, vale, vale,' inquit, 'Iolla.' Menalcas recalls that Phyllis wept when he left town and gave up his better-looking (?) rival, Iollas; on E. IV, 46-53, Clarke suggests that lines 48-52 be regarded as part of the song of the Parcae, continuing their speech begun in 46. Cara deum suboles . . . seems more appropriate to divinities than to the poet, as do 50-53. The poet speaks at line 53. Crane (56) reads perfundant (A. 10, 520: Mynors, OCT., perfundat) and sparsuros (A. 11, 81: Mynors, OCT., sparsurus).

57. Willy Martin, 'A note on Herdan's theory on the recurrence of initial phonemes,' RELO (1973) 2, 1-17.

58. Wilhelm Ott, Metrische Analysen zu Vergil Aeneis Buch I (Tübingen 1973).

59. Wilhelm Ott, Metrische Analysen zu Vergil Aeneis Buch VI (Tübingen 1973).

60. Wilhelm Ott, Metrische Analysen zu Vergil Aeneis Buch XII (Tübingen 1973).

Wilhelm Ott's computer studies of the Aeneid (1, 6, 12) provide the material for subsequent research. The format of the metrical analyses is uniform in the available texts and will remain constant in the books which are yet to appear. Martin (57) treats all initial letters and finds an unusual number of repetitions of the form X1X, where the two X's represent the same letter and there is one intervening line.

VERGIL AND EARLIER WRITERS

61. R. W. Garson, 'Vergil's use of sources in Aeneid XII,' Latin Teaching 30:1 (1973) 26-7 (excerpts).

62. Edward V. George, Aeneis VIII and the Aitia of Callimachus (Mnemosyne Supplement, 27) (Leiden 1974).

63. A. S. Cassio, 'L'incipit della Chioma callimachea in Virgilio,' RFIC 101 (1973) 329-32.

64. Justin Glenn, 'The Blinded Cyclops: Lumen Ademptum (Aen. 3. 658),' CP 69(1974) 37-38.

65. V. Schmidt, 'Dans la chambre d'or de Vulcain (à propos de Virgil. En. 8, 370 sqq.),' Mnem 26 (1973) 350-75.

66. G. Thaniel, 'A note on Aeneid 3. 623-626,' CB 50 (1973) 10-12.

Garson (61) studies similes in A. 12 and adduces Homeric and Callimachean models. George's study of non-Homeric literary tradition in Aeneid 8 is provocative and enlightening. He identifies and describes the aition-sequence of A. 8. The Hellenistic unit provides structural cohesion, a carefully sustained mood from start to finish with variety in intensity and colour, and a single-tendency pattern which culminates in the peace of Evander's angustum tectum. Cassio's article detects Callimachus' Chioma (fr. 110, 1Pf) in E. 3, 41 (descripsit radio . . .), A. 6, 850 (describent radio . . .). A. 6, 851 imitates Cat. 66, 39-40. Glenn (64) detects a Catullian echo (68, 92-3) in A. 3, 658. Schmidt studies Venus' visit to Vulcan (A. 8, 370ff.) as an example of Vergilian ars et ingenium. Vergil borrows material from Homer, Apollonius Rhodius, Lucretius, and Catullus to fashion his new construction. Schmidt counters Macrob. Sat. 1, 24, 7 by rejecting charges of indelicacy in Venus' request on her son's behalf. Thaniel (66) argues that Vergil (A. 3, 623-6) and Euripides, Cyclops 396-404, reflect Homer, Od. 288-90.

ANCIENT AUTHORS AFTER VERGIL

67. Eleanor W. Leach, 'Corydon Revisited: An Interpretation of the Political Eclogues of Calpurnius Siculus,' Ramus 2 (1973) 53-97.

68. A. Hudson-Williams, 'Some Virgilian Echoes in Valerius Flaccus,' Mnem 26 (1973) 23-28.

69. Janet Bews, 'Virgil, Tacitus, Tiberius and Germanicus,' PVS 12 (1972-73) 35-48.

70. Barry Baldwin, 'Aulus Gellius on Vergil,' Vergilius 19 (1973) 22-27.

Eleanor Leach's interpretation of the political Eclogues of Calpurnius Siculus contains useful direction and corrective for critics of Vergil's pastorals. Hudson-Williams (68) detects imitations of Vergil in Valerius Flaccus and a measure of felicity in the art. Bews (69) shows how Tacitus drew on Vergil for literary associations. Although the strain of imperial optimism in Vergil's epic is countered by the imperial pessimism of the Annals, Tacitus nevertheless finds inspiration and perspective as literary historian in Vergil's Augustan epic. The Vergilian language which pervades Tacitus' accounts of Tiberius and Germanicus lends dimension and depth to the historian's interpretation of his material. Baldwin (70) combs Gellius for critical comments on Vergil's style. The Appendix Vergiliana is excluded, and there is a preponderance of references to A. 6. Sometimes called elegantissimus and master poet, at other times Vergil is castigated for scientific inaccuracy, laboured imagery, and mistranslation from the Greek. Colour terms, euphony, distinctive use of common words, textual criticism, and antiquarian lore are favourite topics. In Baldwin's phrase – 'the poet has not fallen victim to any adour of sanctity.'

ANCIENT COMMENTATORS

71. Joan Jeanette Brewer, An Analysis of the Berne Scholia and their Relation to Philargyrius, the Servian Commentaries, and other Exegesis of Vergil's Eclogues (Diss., University of Virginia, 1973) Summary in DA 34 (1973) 1877A.

The Scholia Bernensia constitute one of five principal extant studies from antiquity of Vergil's Eclogues. The anonymous collection of notes follows the form and content of Philargyrius' Explanationes. Although there are game attempts to preserve the more traditional interpretations of Vergil's poems, allegorical interpretations are also manifest.

VERGIL AND LATER AGES

72. H. H. Huxley, 'Aeneid VI and the English Poets,' Proc. Pacific Northwest Conference on Foreign Languages 24 (1973) 212-216.

73. M. M. Kelsall, 'Baroque Virgil: Joseph Trapp's Aeneid,' PVS 12 (1972-73) 1-10.

74. Majorie Donker, 'The Waste Land and the Aeneid,' PMLA 89 (1974) 164-73.

75. G. Lieberg, 'Die Bedeutung Vergils für die Italienische Literatur, aufgezeigt an Dante, Leopardi, Carducci und Pascoli,' Aevum 47 (1973) 417-40.

76. A. Perutelli, 'T. S. Eliot e il concetto di "Tradition" nella critica Anglo-sassone su Virgilio,' Maia 25 (1973) 118-36.

77. Charles Segal, 'Eurydice: Rilke's Transformation of a Classical Myth,' Bucknell Review 21 (1973) 137-44.

78. Robert S. Clark, 'Berlioz and his Trojans,' Hudson Review 26 (1973) 677-84.

The English poets and T. S. Eliot claim the major attention. Kelsall (73) examines Trapp's translation of the Aeneid (1718, 1720) with its extensive preface and elaborate notes, the best known evaluation of Vergil after Dryden's version. Trapp saw the architecture of the epic as so intricately complex that its order defied rational explanation. For Trapp, Vergil (and Milton) was as passionate and as perfect as Bernini and Borromini. Donker (74) indicates that Eliot evokes the concatenation of events in A. 1-6 in his Waste Land. He reformulates this literary monument of the past as a commentary on the present and echoes episodes already ingrained in the literary tradition (Dante, Spenser, and Milton). Images of The Waste Land have conspicuous analogues in the Aeneid. Anchises' sermon in A. 6, a recapitulation of Aeneas' own purgatorial experience as quester, suggests the movement of The Waste Land as a series of trials by water, wind, and fire. Vergil is both guide and inspiration for Eliot. Perutelli's study (76) of traditional aspects in English criticism of Vergil is aligned with Eliot's verdict on the poet. Segal (77) finds Rilke's version of the Orpheus-Eurydice episode a radical alteration of the original.

The loss of Eurydice for Rilke is the poet's loss of his world; her loss marks the end of any simple, tangible relation to the 'visible' world and to concrete reality.

1964-1973. SUPPLEMENTUM.

IV. ECLOGUES

L. E. Rossi, 'Vittoria e sconfitta nell'agone letterario,' GIF 23 (1971) 13-24.

E. Castorina, 'L'ecloga IV e un passo delle Georgiche,' Annali Fac. di Magistero di Bari 5 (1966).

V. GEORGICS

V. E. Hernández Vista, 'Los toros bajo el imperio de Venus. Estudio estilístico de Geórgicas III, 209-41,' Eclás 12 (1968) 479-514.

VI. THE AENEID

G. Carlozzo, 'Motivi Virgiliani di morte,' Atti del' Accad. di Scienze, Lettere e Arti di Palermo, Ser. 4, Vol. 31 (1970-71) 1-40.

Jakob Gassner, Kataloge im römischen Epos. Vergil, Ovid, Lucan. Munich, 1972.

George Thaniel, Themes of Death in Roman Religion and Poetry. Diss., McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, 1971.

H. Offermann, 'Vergil, Aeneis V., 847 und die Palinurusepisode,' Hermes 99 (1971) 164-73.

| A. Deman, 'Crime et châtement du révolutionnaire dans l'historiographie antique,' WZRoStock 18 (1969) 331-7. (Tantalus).

A. Setaioli, 'Nuove osservazioni sulla descrizione dell'oltretomba nel papiro di Bologna,' SIFC 42 (1970) 179-224.

R. Verdère, 'Sur un passage de Virgile,' LM 31-32 (1972) 9-10, (A. 6, 853: cf. A. 1, 19-22).

H. H. Huxley, 'Sir Winston Churchill, Aeneid 7 and the vocative case,' CJ 67 (1971) 68-9.

J. Guey, 'A propos de la réimpression de la thèse de M. Jérôme Carcopino, particulièrement sur Énéide, VIII, 90: avec notre auteur, RUMONE (et non RUMORE) SECUNDO ?' BSAF (1969) 148-54.

W. Huebner, 'Sorex und bubo,' Glotta 49 (1971) 147-9 (A. 12, 862-6).

J. Sanz Ramos, 'Unanimam sororem,' Eclás 12 (1968) 539-59.

Andreas Alföldi, 'Die Penaten, Aeneas und Latinus,' MDAI(R) 78 (1971) 1-57 (52 plates).

E. Sandoval García, 'El mosaico cosmogónico de Mérida,' BSEAA 34-35 (1969) 9-30.

P. Krarup, 'The Faustinus-Inscription from Sperlonga,' Acta Fifth Intern. Congress of Greek and Latin Epigraphy (Oxford 1971) 215-18.

F. H. Pairault, 'Conscience de l'histoire et imagination du passé chez Virgile. Quelques exemples empruntés à l'Énéide,' Caesarodunum 5 (1970) 183-93.

VII. VERGIL AND HIS MILIEU

- G. Lodato, 'Vergilius gezien een medicus,' Hermeneus 43 (1971) 1-11.
 G. Perl, 'Die Krise der römischen Republik im Urteil des Sallust,' Acta Conventus XI Eirene (Warsaw 1971) 95-115 (Sallust, Vergil, and Horace).
 F. Cairns, 'Horace, Odes I, 2,,' Eranos 69 (1971) 68-88. (cf. A. 6, 792f.)
 D. Pietrusiński, 'Les apothéoses d'Auguste dans les poèmes de Virgile,' (in Polish) Eos 60 (1972) 269-83.
 E. S. Hatzantonis, 'Le amare fortune di Circe nella letteratura latina,' Latomus 30 (1971) 3-22, (Vergil & Ovid).
 C. Rambaux, 'La composition d'ensemble du livre I des Satires d'Horace,' REL 49 (1971) 179-204, (cf. pyramidal structure of Eclogues).

VIII. STYLE, LANGUAGE, METER

- R. Lucot, 'Apparitions souveraines (Étude de rythmes),' Pallas 18 (1971) 55-8.

IX. INTERPRETATION AND TEXT CRITICISM

- B. Effe, 'Labor improbus, ein Grundgedanke der Georgica in der Sicht des Manilius (I, 80f.),' Gymnasium 78 (1971) 393-9.

X. COMPUTER STUDIES

- R. J. Rowland, 'A new use of the heterodyne-homodyne theory,' RELO 4 (1971) 39-43.

XI. VERGIL AND EARLIER WRITERS

- E. L. Harrison, 'The subtlety of the oral poet,' Eranos 69 (1971) 166-8.
 H. A. Mason, 'Nature in Pope and Homer,' Cambridge Quarterly 5 (1970) 3-24 (A. 12, 684ff.).
 U. Todini, 'La cosmologia pitagorica e le Muse enniane,' RCCM 13 (1971) 21-38 (A. 10, 215-6).

XII. ANCIENT AUTHORS' AFTER VERGIL

- S. Condorelli, 'Ecum aedificant. A proposito di una citazione vergiliana in Quintiliano,' Helikon 8 (1968) 380-2.
 Kajetan Gantar, 'Ucalegonte in Vergilio, Omero e Giovenale,' Accad. Vergiliana di Mantova. Atti e Memorie 39 (1971) 1-6. (A. 2, 312).
 L. Herrmann, 'Tertullianiana I: Tertullien et S. Pomponius,' Latomus 30 (1971) 151 (Sextus Pomponius, author of cento Tityrus, Vat. Pal. Latin. 1753).
 D. M. Kriel, 'Moontlike teen-Vergiliaanse momente in Lucanus, BC VI, 413-830,' Pro munere grates. Studies presented to H. L. Gonin (ed. D. M.

Kriel (Pretoria 1971) 91-98.

S. Lundström, "'Sprach's" bei Silius Italicus,' Acta. Soc. Hum. Litt. Ludensis (Lund, 1971) 136pp.

A. L. Motto & R. J. R. Clark, 'Et terris iactatus et alto. The art of Seneca's Epistle LIII,' AJP 92 (1971) 217-25.

C. L. Ramage, 'The Confessions of St. Augustine. The Aeneid revisited,' Pacific Coast Philology 5 (1970) 54-60.

G. Stégen, 'Sur trois epigrammes de Martiale,' AC 40 (1971) 215-17 (XII, 14: parody of A. 10, 712-3; XIV, 71, cf. A. 4, 158-9).

R. Verdière, 'Lucain 7, 62-65,' Latomus 30 (1971) 723. (cf. A. 6, 819).

MANUSCRIPTS

¹ N. Huyghebaert, 'Trois manuscrits de Jean Crabbe, abbé des Dunes,' Scriptorium 23 (1969) 232-42. (Holkham Hall 311: ca. 1473).

G. Wataghin Cantino, 'Veduta dall'alto e scena a volo d'uccello,' RIA 16 (1969) 30-107 (Vatican Vergil, miniatures).

XIII. VERGIL AND LATER AGES

E. Hatzantonis, 'Variations of a Vergilian theme in Dante and Lope de Vega,' Pacific Coast Philology 6 (1971) 35-42 (A. 6, 298-304).

G. Petrocchi, 'Virgilio e la poetica del Tasso,' GIF 23 (1971) 1-12.

F. A. Petrovskij, 'Die russischen Übersetzungen der Aeneis und die Aufgaben der Neuübersetzung,' (In Russian) Probl. de litt. & philol. ant. (Moscow 1966) 293-306.

M. G. Androtti Saibene, Rapporti tra l'Eneide di Vergilio e l'Eneide di Heinrich von Veldeke (Firenze 1972).

G. Zwierlein, 'Das Waltharius-Epos und seine lateinische Vorbilder,' A&A 16 (1970) 153-84.

A. G. McKAY

McMaster University

BOOK REVIEWS

Eric Sjöqvist, Sicily and the Greeks. Ann Arbor: The University of Michigan Press, 1973. Pp. xiii, 90. $10.00.

In this stimulating volume, originally presented as the Ninth Series of the Jerome Lectures, Eric Sjöqvist examines the historical process resulting in the Hellenization of the indigenous population of Sicily and the concomitant problem of the degree to which Greek Civilization in Sicily was modified by the native element. An introductory chapter stresses the casual and tangential nature of Bronze Age contacts between the Aegean world and Sicily. The permanent Hellenic occupation of the island, beginning with the great eighth century colonization, forms the central portion of the work. In four brief