VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY (1974-75)

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the thirteenth in the Vergilius series. Classical World 68.1 (1974), published in association with the Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my 'Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964 - 1973.' The Survey may be obtained from the offices of Classical World and from the Treasurer of The Vergilian Society, Inc. A list of Addenda to the ten-year survey appeared as a Supplementum to 'Vergilian Bibliography (1973-74)' in Vergilius 20 (1974). The editor of the "Vergilian Bibliography" welcomes reprints of articles and bibliographical notices for inclusion in subsequent bibliographies. The mailing address is: Department of Classics, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario L8S 4M2.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

1. Cipriano Conti, 'Rassegna di studi sull' Appendix Vergiliana (II Parte), BStudLat 4 (1974) 229-63.
  2. W. R. Nethercut, 'Weaving: A Point of Art in the Ciris,' CB 51 (1975) 62.
  3. J. A. Richmond, 'The Archtype of the Priapea and Catalepton,' Hermes 102 (1974) 300-304.
- Conti's article completes his annotated survey of scholarship from 1955-72. Nethercut argues that compounds of texere, "to weave", lend unity to the epyllion. Richmond supports the independence of the four Priapea from the sixteen poems of Catalepton.

ECLOGUES: GENERAL STUDIES

4. Javier de Echave-Sustaeta, 'Virgilio desde dentro: dos claves de estilo en las 'Eglogas'', Estudios clásicos 17 (1973) 261-90.

7. E. D. Kollmann, 'Die Stimme Vergils in seinen Eklogen,' StudClas 15 (1973) 69-85.

Echave-Sustaeta treats echo and resonance and the shift from reality to the imaginary as poetic characteristics of the Eclogues. Flintoff accepts the Bucolics as a cycle of poems with a deep underlying unity. The spiritual landscape, Arcadia, is set in the real landscape of Northern Italy; the simple place-names often have great complexity of meaning. Highet's article is a reminder that Vergil's bucolic poems were performed or recited publicly and suggests performing casts of cantores.

- Clay (10) suggests that the two riddles allude to V's bucolic poetry; ulna suggests the hexameter line (so three hexameters); the flower with the king's name grows in the poem (63); the poem is a land (quibus in terris). Things of great moment are treated in a slight manner, in the small compass of the bucolic poem. Schöpsdau treats Eclogue III, 64-83, and 84-91. Coleiro identifies Tiphys (Ecl. 4,34) with Herodes of Palestina. Fantazzi examines V's subtle use of literary echo and allusion to construct a persuasive mythical statement of Rome's future, the promise of renewal. Fantazzi favors parenti (with Poliziano, based on Quintilian) and places the onus on the child.

  18. Eva M. Stehle, 'Virgil's Georgics: The Threat of Sloth,' TAPA 104 (1974) 347-69.
- Piferrer's monograph devotes 109 pages to Vergil's fourth Georgic; the yield is modest. Stehle examines the theodicy and the Aristaeus-Orpheus episode as complementary expressions of V's main theme, labor and sloth.

  30. E. Zoffagno, 'Nomi di Rutuli nell'Eneide,' Att.Acc.Ligure Sc.Lett. (Genova) 29 (1972) 304-13.
- Coleiro considers the Aeneid as a political publication and allegory borrowing colours from a distant imaginary past; its meaning bears on the present with almost mystical suggestiveness. Turnus' death is Vergil's apology for Octavian's not having spared Antony; Octavia becomes the historical substitute for Pallas. Di Cesare and Dimock regard Aeneas' choice of fury at the close as a character fault; a man of love resorts to the passion for revenge at the close. Gransden provides valuable guidelines for the allegorizing process (in contrast with Binder's Aeneas und Augustus) and indicates how we may discover new relevance and meanings. Highet's study of speech and narrative is helpful and enlightening. Horsfall cites historical allusions in the epic which accent the Rome-Carthage hostility, and pleads for fresh appreciation of factors in the creation of Vergil's Dido. The tradition has nothing to do with Greek literary heroines or with Catullus' Ariadne; the roots lie in Roman history and prejudice. Violence, greed, duplicity and hatred are the hallmarks of an unromantic historical element, a recollection of the old hatred of the Punic Wars. Sordi's volume provides a research group study of the integration of Italy in the Roman state as reflected in the poets Horace, Propertius, and Vergil. All are unanimous in identifying the old Roman virtues with those of Italy; V. associates the more civilised qualities with Etruria and Latium. Williams' entertaining article shows that Henry's monumental commentary, despite its idiosyncrasies, often bizarre, benefited Vergilian scholarship.

- Slater regards Aen. 1. 683ff., as typically Roman with the delicium-cupid at a banquet. Vergil may be reflecting practices in the Imperial household where the wife of Augustus, like her husband, surrounded herself with delicia. Clarke argues that V sidesteps eulogy of Augustus to indicate that only after Augustus' apotheosis will peace on earth become a reality.
- Kraggerud repeats and expands the observations of Goold and Murgia on the much-debated authenticity of the Helen passage (2. 567-88). Biermann (37) offers a class syllabus. Currie suggests that Dido's virtues finally bring her low after the pattern of Sophoclean tragedy. Estevez treats Aen. 4, 68-73, 300-3, 665-71 as causally related stages in Dido's decline and fall. Foster offers suggestions about Vergil's relationship to contemporary Roman drama. Theatrical paradigms and devices heighten real-life tragedy in the first four books of the epic. Tracy's article shows how the Marcellus episode introduces a theme which is new to the poem and recurs in Books 9-12. Sparrow's lecture urges that Aeneas merits sympathy rather than censure; Dido wins pity, hardly sympathy. Saylor underscores V's devotion to Roman order and destiny; in sentiment and style, V is a Latin sympathizer. Eden's full-scale commentary offers an Introduction on the material and on structure and coherence, an Appendix on metre and verse, an Index Verborum and Index Nominum et Rerum. Problems of interpretation, textual problems, and sensitive criticism are evident throughout. Vergil's management of cultural forces produced a unique synthesis of literary tradition, myth, history, antiquarianism, and religion. Huxley examines the Euryalid and finds it unsatisfactory and in need of revision; perhaps V suggests that we contrast the irrational pietas of the Trojan commandoes with the rational pietas of their absent leader. Burke (48) argues that cruelty and pietas in Trojan and enemy protagonists underline the sense of disastrous waste and wrongness in the war; there is no absolute right or wrong, only varying degrees of blindness and guilt blended with devotion and courage. Elsewhere Burke points to the irony of Mezentius' becoming the primitiae offered to Mars by Aeneas. Nethercut links Mezentius and Latinus as exemplars of the dignity of human grief.

AENEID: STRUCTURE

53. Roger Lesueur, L'Énéide de Virgile: étude sur la composition rythmique d'une épopée. (Toulouse 1975).

Lesueur examines the epic from the structural standpoint with special attention to Books 1-6 and 7-12, the role of Saturnian Juno and the importance of Aeneid 4. Agonistic structure (labores of Aeneas and ira Junonis), analogies with Greek tragedy, the inevitable progress of the action, and triadic design are among the topics treated by the Toulouse scholar. Jacques Perret remarks: 'La bibliographie virgilienne ne cesse de s'accroître et souvent d'ouvrages excellents; mais on y voit rarement paraître un livre porteur de vues aussi neuves sur un point aussi central.'

60. Bertha Tilly, 'The Laurentian Forest,' Vergilius 20 (1974) 12-15.

Bertoldi treats Julio-Claudian buildings in the Forum of Cumae. Galinsky, Pena, and Sommella examine the finds and the implications at Pratica di Mare (anc. Lavinium), notably the sanctuary, thirteen altars, and heroön of Aeneas Indiges ('ancestor'), the last dating from the fourth century B.C. Tilly explores the territory of Aen. 7, 26-36, and 9, 378, 381-93, in 1969, a hunting ground for the President of the Italian Republic.

64. Roger Lesueur, 'Renseignement moral dans les "Jeux" de l'Énéide,' Pallas 21 (Annales Univ. Toulouse) 10 (1974) 33-48.

Clark offers a searching analysis of Aen. 6, 739-51, lines which recall Pindar, Empedocles, the Gold Leaves, and Plato, explores the imagery of the wheel, clarifies punctuation, and counters R. D. Williams, who construes the lines mistakenly.

72. Pol Tordeur, 'Elision de mots pyrrhiques et tribraques dans l'hexamètre latin,' Latomus 33 (1974) 353-69.

Nethercut adduces an article by J. G. Griffiths, 'The Death of Cleopatra VII,' JEA 47 (1961) 113-8, and a subsequent interchange between B. Baldwin (JEA 50 (1964) 181-2) and Griffiths (JEA 51 (1965) 209-11) to shed light on Aen. 8, 697; he supports Knox's celebrated arguments for the importance of snake imagery in the epic by an appeal to Propertius (3.13.64ff) and the snake-plague passages in Georgics 3. Sir Ronald Syme finds Vergil (and Horace) steeped in 'contemporary political ideas for which they are, in fact, the best evidence.'

INTERPRETATION AND TEXT CRITICISM

73. E. Coleiro, 'De versu amisso in Buc. IV Vergilii,' Vita Latina 54 (1974) 15-18.

76. E. D. Kollman, 'Cerno und decerno bei Vergil (Zu Aeneis XII 709),' RhM 116 (1973) 269-75.

Coleiro favours Skutsch's schema for Bucolic IV (HSCP 73 (1968) 153-69) and postulates a missing line after verse 23; he supplies, with the assistance of Georgics 3, 537, the following: nec lupus insidias componet ovilia circum. Monat uses an indirect tradition to establish ferrea progenies (cf. Hesiod, sidereion genos). Kollmann reads at Aen. 12, 709: coisse viros et decernere ferro.

- Klein is concerned inter alia with the Georgics (230f.). Segal examines Aen. 2, 790-5; 6, 703-6; 5, 738-45; 12, 952, and further illuminates the near axiom of Vergilian criticism that Vergil never merely borrows; he always transforms.

85. R. W. Garson, 'The Eclogues of Calpurnius. A Partial Apology,' Latomus 33 (1974) 668-72.
- Clark finds reasons for the mistaken association of Christ's Resurrection with the Sibyl's cave at Cumae, and of His Descent with Avernus. Fantham shows that Seneca's Phaedra, Medea, and Clytaemnestra are reinterpretations of the Greek heroines in terms of Vergil's Dido.

Demaray discovers Milton's Paradise in Vergil's Campania. Davie highlights Vergilian traits in Thomas Hardy's poetry. Di Cesare provides a complete annotated bibliography of one of Vergil's most famous followers. Evans (101) treats Ovid's debt to Vergil's Scythian digression at Georgics 3, 349-83. Guentner compares six secular polyphonic compositions which used part of Dido's lament (Aen. 4, 642-60). Huxley's Latin verse compositions address Nisus, with indebtedness to Anchises' facilis iactura sepulcri; and the Numidian Iarbas. Martyn treats a Welsh neo-Latinist (1564-1627). Mason's study deals with the presence of Virgil and Dryden in Pope's translation of the Iliad and detects the Vergilian voice in the poetic version. Schmidt argues that Vergil may have provided bucolic inspiration for Thomas Mann's Death in Venice. Weiss finds similarities between the popular epic (Cid) and the learned and artistic Aeneid.
