VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1987–1988

In Memoriam - Edward Togo Salmon (1905-1988)

The present survey of Vergilian scholarship is the twenty-sixth in the VERGILIUS series. Classical World 68:1 (1974), published in association with the Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my "Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964-73." The survey was reprinted in The Classical World Bibliography of Vergil (Walter Donlan, ed.), Garland Publishing, Inc. (New York & London 1978). Subsequent reviews of scholarship have appeared in Vergilius 19 (1973), 20 (1974), 21 (1975), 22 (1976), 23 (1977), 24 (1978), 25 (1979), 26 (1980), 27 (1981), 28 (1982), 29 (1983), 30 (1984), 31 (1985), 32 (1986) and 33 (1987).

This compilation is uniquely indebted to the assistance and cooperation of several libraries: The University of Texas at Austin; Fondation Hardt, Vandoeuvres (Geneva); Cambridge University; and the Institute of Classical Studies, London. Offprints of articles and titles for inclusion in the annual VERGILIUS Bibliography have once again been generously provided by readers, and scholars are urged to send material and advice to the editor of "Vergilian Bibliography," c/o Department of Classics, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada L8S 4M2.

48. David West, "Translating the Aeneid," Omnibus 14 (1987) 8–10.

Translations of Vergil's opera continue unabated. Bacchielli's verse translations and Chouet's translation into Alexandrines vie for notice with those of Della Corte, Erren, and C. H. Sisson (1986). Martindale urges that translators "stick as closely as possible to the original order"; Segal favors Latimore's approach over those of Day Lewis and Fitzgerald. West, whose prose translation of the epic for Penguin Books will supersede that of Jackson Knight, examines the merits and faults of translators of Aeneid 2.604–623 (Day Lewis, Fitzgerald, Sisson, and, most enthusiastically, Gavin Douglas [1474?–1522]). West's critical comments are tempered at the close with a plea to readers to treat translators of the epic with "all possible forbearance and generosity." Suerbaum's text, based on Geymonat's edition (1973), offers 70 alterations. Scholarly and meticulous, Suerbaum's text is the best available.

75. A. Salvatore, "Aspetti e problemi dell'Appendix Vergiliana," CONVEGNO I 34–49.

Alfonsi argues that Catalepton 9 reflects Parthenius of Nicaea. Cavallini deals with Ciris, 171ff and Lydia 24ff. Echave–Sustaeta detects analogies between Moretum and Georgics 4.116–148. Hoffman links tabellae defixionis with Dirae. Richmond favors the young Vergil as author of the Catalepton. Salvatore studies Greek and Latin models for the Appendix Vergiliana and argues for the authenticity of both Culex and Ciris.

101. E. Caballero de del Sastre, "El 'insanus amor' en la egloga X di Virgilio," AFC (Buenos Aires) 11 (1986) 45–54.

Nuzzo detects a chiasitic relationship between the members of the Bucolic quartet. Van Sickle rejects Mayer's argument (CQ 33 [1983] 298–300) and sides with the social reality of slavery. Takenaka studies Theocritus Idyll 11 and Eclogue 2. Morgan consigns strawberry-consuming adders to folklore. Fontanella analyses Buc. 4.50. Uruchadse identifies the puer with Octavian. Acu a studies the Daphnis cult as distinct from the apotheosis of Julius Caesar in Eclogue 5. Michelazzo traces parvus Micon in Ovid, Met. 3.138–252. Mankin reexamines the controversy attaching to the addressee of Eclogue 8 and settles on Octavian. Segal offers a detailed comparison of Eclogue 8 and Theocritus Idyll 2.

Cicu analyses Georgics 1.351–463 in light of Varro and Aratus in an effort to reconstruct the process of poetic composition. Forni studies Georgics 1.147–148, 160–162, 169–175 in light of reconstructions of the celebrated plough. Martyn underscores Vergil's appeal to Pan (and Neptune) as inventor. Vergil evidently highlights a relatively unimportant deity. Paschalis derives Vergil's first proem from Lucretius' De Rerum Natura with Octavian as replacement for Venus and Epicurus. Shackleton–Bailey retains ms. rorem at Georgics 2.212–213. Alfonsi detects echoes of Varro in Georgics 3.163–165 and 182–186. Anderson can find no firm evidence for the serpent in the Orpheus–Eurydice myth in 5th-century Greek writing. Deroux interprets Aristaeus' complaint as an attack on the doctrine of work prior to his conversion. Jocelyn expresses confidence in Servius' implication of two editions of the fourth Georgic. 'Either someone saw a text of the Georgics with two hundred and fifty verses praising Gallus instead of relating the story of Aristaeus or someone invented a total falsehood out of nothing' (p. 440). Murgatroyd provides a close analysis of the Orpheus–Eurydice panel. Nelson finds correspondences between the Orphic myth and basic convictions of the Georgics. André Thill examines the Aristaeus epyllion in conjunction with Catullus and the Culex and Ciris. Wellesley compares Georgics 4.158–169 with Aeneid 1.430–436.

Anderson is concerned with agricultural facts contained in epic similes and with Georgics imagery adapted to epic narrative details. Cleary understands the epic in musical terms with Vergil as orchestrator. Galinsky's lecture focusses on epic values, optimistic and pessimistic interpretations, and on Turnus as a character worthy of sympathy and understanding whose actions we cannot condone. Giardina reads quis at Aen. 9.172. Fowler nominates Hardie's work as "the densest and most suggestive book on the Aeneid since Heinze." Khan argues that Vergil uses the perversion of epithalamial motifs in the Dido–Aeneas episode to mark the liaison as mariage manqué. McKay highlights Aeneas as a novel hero, with responsibility, devotion and passion, a promoter of peace and universal order. Monaco senses more than geography and topography in the Sicilian episodes which are charged with emotion and idealism. Morford underscores literary, historical and moral aspects of the epic which render it notably Roman. Nethercut discusses basic design and motifs which render the epic particularly Augustan. Petrochilos rejects the idea of hostility to Greece and Greeks in the epic. Augustan policy would suggest tolerance. Pomathios provides a precursor to Francis Cairns' forthcoming Virgil's Augustan Epic (Cambridge 1988). Smolenaars' study (#113) dissociates Georgics 2.538 and Saturn's rule over Latium in Aeneid 8; blissful idleness yields to the pure and simple life of toil at the dawn of civilization. Thomas' article on the quest draws on mystery religion. Verstraete argues against commitment to one particular brand of hermeneutics or scholarship. R. Deryck Williams' posthumous book studies historical and political realities of Vergil's lifespan and analyses issues and poetic values. He expresses a formidable and enduring debt to T. R. Glover and R. G. Austin.

Barigazzi assigns lacrimae rerum to the painting rather than to the Carthaginians. Friedland's translations are the product of collaboration with Steven Farron of Witwatersrand. Heuzé examines the perplexing consequences of gifts and spoils. Janko finds ominous echoes in earlier epitaphic tradition. R. M. Wilhelm provides a critical essay on Aeneid 1–4. Gardiner argues for audentem (2.349) over audendi for better structure and sense. O'Nolan tries to eliminate difficulties in Aen. 4.343. Ferraro equates caedes with caesum armentum. Diouf subjects Aeneid 4.450–640 to searching investigation. Harrison studies the theatrical atmosphere of Aeneid 4. Ward Jones concentrates on the portrayal of Mercury and argues against an allegorical or symbolic interpretation of his intervention. Nicoll aligns Gyas with Marc Antony (Aen. 5.116–286) as a potentially reckless ruler. M. P. Wilhelm studies Aeneid 5–8 as books of transition, both physical and emotional, for Aeneas and his followers. Zurutusa detects the Latin Genius and Greek heroic cult in the ceremonials at Anchises' tomb. Brenk argues that Vergil was influenced by the Polites legend in creating the Palinurus incident. Innocent and pathetic in their ruin, their just retribution ends with propitiation of their remains. Büchner treats Rome's imperial mission (pacique imponere morem). Della Corte includes Tibullus, Vergil, Ovid, and Culex in his review. Feeney examines the setting and content of the Hades episode, Anchises' speech, and the heroes' parade in conjunction with Lucan's Underworld. Kinsey aligns Aen. 6.69–70 with either the Actian Games at Nicopolis or the temple restoration at Actium; festos dies applies to both. Servius' suggestion of the Ludi Apollinares is incorrect. Öberg advances textual alterations and changes in punctuation. Paschalis argues that Vergil does not confuse Leucadian with Actian Apollo. Apollo Actius is the savior of Octavian (704–705). Perret, with Valerius Flaccus and Statius as guides, suggests that Aen. 6.602–607 and 616–620 were interchanged. Perrone senses Plato, Rep. 10.614 c–d behind inanes animae. Poirier de Narçay identifies the entry to Hades with the vestibule of an earthly mansion. Dutra examines the last four books with their vicissitudes of war, examples of friendship, death and courage, and the final act. Heiden accents the succession from savagery to order. Novara observes the oscillation between past and present in Aeneid 8 (from Cacus to Actium) alongside divine time (Venus and Vulcan), and the powers of divinity. Romoeuf defends the literary and imaginative character of Aeneas' shield against specific details and correspondences. Dewar reads exilium (not exitium) at Aen. 10.846–850 (echoed in Statius, Theb. 9.49–53). Yamasawa interprets Iapyx's ministrations to wounded Aeneas as an act of piety, echoed in Aeneas' address to Ascanius as sequel.

Castellani argues that Anna and Juturna help to assess the moral position of their respective siblings and their common foe. Horsfall's analysis of the "launching" of Camilla on Metabus's spear stresses earlier elements and ancient criticism. Levy aligns Aeneas with Ch'ung Erh (636–628 B.C.) as cult heroes. C. J. Mackie's study, The Characterisation of Aeneas, has been announced as Scottish Classical Studies, 4. Opelt accents Vergil's affection for Achates, his personal creation. Paschalis notes that Vergil's reformation of Aeneas' birthplace, from Mount Ida to the banks of Simois, suited Augustan morality. Putnam studies active and passive hesitations in the epic, culminating in the final scene with Turnus. Tracy details the "learned" version of Laocoon's death which ignored Minerva and the Trojan Horse. Wilhelm studies the Diana simile (Aen. 1.496–504) in association with Camilla, and with Dido's character that combines both Diana and Venus. Winkler's article highlights the role of Musaeus in Vergil's Underworld.

Bauzá comments on the recent finds at Pratica di Mare (Lavinium). Col-linge rejects the Sotades Painter as unique illustrator of Aristaeus in pursuit of Eurydice. Edlund’s article on sacred geography is concerned with local divinities at Avernus, the Sorrentine peninsula, and Naples during the 3rd and 2nd centuries B.C. Foerster associates the Hadrianic relief work with the duel between Aeneas and Turnus. Immagini Virgiliane provides superb color and black and white illustrations of Vergilian sites in Italy. De Franciscis’ longer article is an indispensable up-date and commentary on the archaeology of Vergilian sites in Campania. Grandazzi is concerned with the legendary metropolis of Rome which was destroyed by Tullus Hostilius. Hatzikosta treats Buc. 1.64–66, and Georg. 1.240–241. Horsfall’s CONVEGNO article uses Pompeian graffiti and art to assess which works were most popular during the first century A.D. Horsfall senses more illusion than reality in Latin topographical writing. Martin shows that the prophecy of the foundation of Lavinium is recalled on republican denarii of L. Papius Celsus and a sextans (213–211 B.C.). Pagliara’s recently discovered grotto near Otranto, replete with Greek, Mes-sapic, and Roman graffiti, lies within “Vergilian” territory. Redde’s larger study includes useful remarks on Misenum (pp. 186–196).

Amalfitano's study of the Cumaeen Sibyl is unmatched for information and provocative comment. Caramalengou's article on the Penates is concerned with public and private aspects and their role in the epic. Her study of historical passages concentrates on Aen. 6.752–887 and 8.625–731 and on Stoic components of Vergil's conception of history. Dauge finds analogies with Hinduism and Buddhism in Aeneas' spiritual experience. Paschalis assesses the "raging Sibyl," a creature of ecstasy and delirium, inspired by the Delius vates (Aen. 6.11–12). Glaucus, Deiphobe's father, was localized at Delos. Perret is sensitive to benign Providence in the epic. Sbordone assesses Vergil's links with Philodemus and Siro.

Ballaira responds to F. Brunhölzl (CodMan. 10 1984, 33–37) and regards the Qasr Ibrîm papyrus as genuine. Buchheit provides a provocative reading of Horace Odes I.32 in connection with Vergil. Della Corte is concerned with imitations of Vergil's Bucolics in Horace's Satires I. Cretia detects folktale elements in Aeneid 5.835–861 (death of Palinurus) and 7.407–476 (Turnus' sleep). Ovid's reaction to Vergilian pietas, according to Fabre, introduces emotions peculiar to Alexandrian poets. Goodyear examines Vergilian influence on Pompeius Trogus' Historiae Philippicae (ca. A.D. 10). Horsfall's article on patronage is concerned primarily with Horace. Kennedy dwells on the invocation of Arethusa in Bucolic 10 and assesses the possible significance of Arcadia in the poetry of both Gallus and Vergil. Leach is concerned with Vergil's transformation and critical approach in connection with Varro's De Re Rustica. Lieberg examines and rejects Brunhölzl's suggestion of a modern forgery and identifies the domina with Lycoris. Martin includes Varro RR 1.2.3–6, Pliny, N.H. 3.5.39–41 and 37, 77, 201–203 and Vergil, Geo. 2.136–175 in his study of the Laus Italiae in Dionysius of Halicarnassus. Morelli and Tandoi align Bucolic 2 with Qasr Ibrîm papyrus verses 8–9 and argue for common derivation from Parthenius. Mosca identifies Epode 10 as a parodic propemptikon against Vergil's detractor (cf. Buc. 3.90). Nagore and Pérez include Livy, Propertius, and Ovid in their estimate of Vergil, Aeneid 8.184–275. Nemeth advances Archilochus fr. 74 and Vergil, Catalepton 5 as background for Horace, Odes I.34. Neumeister finds parallels in Ovid, Metam. 10.1–11, 66 and Vergil, Geo. 4.457–527.

Lyne is concerned mainly with prosaic and colloquial diction that is "disconcertingly familiar—teasing and dense."

Freudenburg contrasts the Lucretian plague (DRN 6) with the regeneration and hope of Georgics 4. Hornsby notices that Vergil transforms Homer via philosophers, thinkers, and poets into something applicable to the human condition of his days and for all time. Ralph Johnson questions why Theocritus used the figure of Daphnis to open his collection and why, in closing his pastoral book, Vergil evoked the Theocritean Daphnis with a witty loving caricature of him. Patricia Johnston studies the implications of the Catullian echo (invitus, regina . . .) for Dido's fate after the pattern of Ptolemaic queens. Mayer notes that Evander appeals to Jupiter as a fellow Arcadian, a learned conceit evidenced in Callimachus, Hymn 1.6–7, 10. Muller De Inda and Villalba study Hesiod W&D 504–525 and Vergil, Geo. 1.299–310. Nethercut's lectures on the indebtedness to Iliad and Odyssey focus on Vergil's characteristic alterations and fresh inspiration in fashioning a celebration of Rome's accomplishment. His lecture on epic as innovative literature highlights Vergil's concern with pietas, and with humanity, past, present and future, a dimension previously untried in epic. Pöschl confronts Aeneas with Achilles, Jason, Cato and Caesar in Lucan, and Titus, in Racine's Berenice. Purcell comments on Aen. 11.477–85. Quinn tackles Vergil's relationship to Homer in terms of value system, and examines Aen. 10.146–62 and 260–275 for Homeric conventions with a difference. Rutledge appraises sources and background factors behind Vergil's composite masterpiece. Van Sickle looks at Vergil's precursors and suggests that while Vergil wrote "humble pastoral" he kept his eye on epic tradition and its motifs. Suerbaum deals with Cassius Hemina, frag 9, a, b, and the "message" of Samothrace. Thibau argues that Vergil was first to affirm the meaning of the Homeric shield passage. Williams studies Vergil's interpretation of Idyll 7 and its adaptation to Ecloques 10 and 6. Wills shows how Vergil exploits a poetic allusion in Odyssey 14.112–117 in Aen. 8.273–279. Wright compares Eclogue 1 and Juvenal 3.145–147. Zanker aligns Hesiod W&D 202–212 and Eclogue 9.11–13.

Boyle examines Vergil's conception of his poetic and artistic role and contrasting stances in Petronius and Tacitus. Kenney examines the Mosella and indebtedness to Vergil, Statius, and Pliny the Younger. Ogilvie considers three aspects of Lactantius' debts to Vergil. Saylor adduces the epic games as reference point without specific correspondences. Timpanaro studies Seneca, De Ira 2.35 and Aeneid 8.702–703.

406. J. Van Sickle, Poesia e potere: il mito Virgilio. (Roma–Bari 1986). Rev: R. Lloyd, CJ 83 (1988) 272–273.

Griffin’s book has emerged as the best available introduction to Vergil. Van Sickle’s book is a reflection on the ancient Vitae Vergilianae: the poet’s personal involvement with political power, his role as cantor of the Augustan Peace, and as eulogist of Octavian–Augustus. Van Sickle is also concerned with how and why Vergil became the Vates Mantuanus in Western culture.

Fiorina is concerned with fragments of Aeneid 6, 7, 11, and 12. Holtz traces rediscoveries of Vergil through manuscript production and transmission. Lana's commentary attaches to the Milan reproduction of 309 surviving leaves. The Brazilian volume, with text, translation and notes, incorporates the Medicean Codex facsimile, history and commentary, and a Portuguese translation of the Vitae Vergilianae.

Armour argues that Vergil's convictions about the eternal greatness of Rome and the Underworld induced Dante to view him as his auctor. Averintsev traces bonds between Vergil and Schiller, Hölderlin, Hugo, Peguy, Ungaretti, Broch, Kipling and Ivanov. Baldwin salutes the linguistic skills of Dio Cassius (75, 10, 2) and of Malalas in his treatment of Aeneid 4.302–303. Bataillon shows that Vergil was used for grammatical instruction in the 13th-century University of Paris. Beaune provides a fascinating review of Trojan motifs for prestige in Europe of the Middle Ages. Benedini's short history of the Accademia Virgiliana signals unique accomplishments through the centuries. Berlioz treats a narrative genre of the late Middle Ages concentrating on Vergil. Bosch shows how the Vergilian Golden Age invaded the Primavera tapestry designed by Bronzino for Cosimo de' Medici. Brault treats cynegetical imagery in Vergil and Ovid. Brooks–Davies explores the political significance of allusions to Vergil's Georgics and Aeneid as support for the exiled Stuart. Coleman offers glimpses of Vergilian influence on the French Pléiade, Racine, Baudelaire, and Valéry. Pierre Courcelle studies readings and interpretations of Vergil's epic by Christian authors and commentators, and with Jeanne Courcelle shows the evolution of thought and taste as evidenced in the illustrated mss. of Vergil from the 10th to the 15th century. Phyllis Culham offers a provocative poem. Dalzell shows how Berlioz reproduced the drama and romance of the epic in Les Troyens. Davidson's novel features Vergilius Magus, the medieval conception, in Roman Imperial times. Dronke treats the 12th-century commentary on the Aeneid by Bernard Silvester as masterly exegesis. Dworakowska studies the 5th century miniature relating to Aeneid 1.419–429.

Four students collaborate on commemorative essays in Bimillenario Mantova (1983). Milton's combats are, in Forsyth's view, products of Vergilian, Homeric and Biblical norms converging to yield vivid contrasts between frenetic activity and quiet endurance. Frankel shows that for Dante the epic contained a religious message, an anticipation of the Christian Revelation. Dante reinterpreted the epic to disclose a Christian sub text. Grimal summarizes and analyses papers on the Middle Ages' reception of Vergil. Hooker shows that Shakespeare's Antonio misread Vergil in the crudest manner. Huxley provides entertaining Latin verses and a metrical puzzle. Johnston adverts to Vergil's Georgics for the basic country–city relationship and poetry of place. Klopsch offers transformations of Vergil's Bucolics in different literary genres. La Penna traces Gide's devotion to Vergil until his death in 1951. Guy Lobrichon surveys the impact of Bucolic 4 on the Middle Ages and the rendering of Vergil as a secular saint. McKay traces the presence of Vergil in early Quebec curricula and suggests analogies between Aeneas' and Cartier's quests. His art lecture traces renderings of the epic from earliest miniatures to Barry Moser. Alain Michel traces Vergil's impact on Sainte-Beuve, Hugo, and Claudel. Miola examines Shakespeare's "dialogue" with Vergil, who is a deep source of image and idea for Hamlet. Muscolini finds sources for the frescoes in illustrated editions of the Aeneid produced in Venice. Nethercut offers a personal critique of American scholarship on Vergil from the first trials with the Appendix Vergiliana. Norton-Smith studies similes in both Vergil and Milton and highlights multiple correspondences. Pajares treats modifications of the Dido story by Alfonso the Wise: the gods were ignored, destiny was set aside, and Aeneas married Dido. Patterson's handsome volume is a comprehensive, searching analysis of pastoral in literature and art. Reinhold's lecture on Vergil Americanized emphasizes negative and positive influences on the early Americans. Roncaglia documents echoes of Vergil in troubadour works of the 13th century. Schuchard traces the Dido and Aeneas episode in English theatre, opera, and operetta.

Tilliette studies the influence of Vergil on the Golden Age of mediaeval Latinity. Valerio is concerned with 14th-century translations of the epic by Ciampolo Ugurgieri of Siena and by Andrea Lanci of Florence. Walsh tracks Vergilian influence in Prudentius, Paulinus of Nola, and Waltharius, Walter of Chatillon’s Alexandreis, et al. Walthaus highlights images and symbols in the Golden Age drama. Ward concentrates on Vergil as necromancer in the Old French Work of Thomas III. Watson–Macpherson appraises Eliot’s appreciation of Vergil. Wiltshire’s Potomac lecture highlights the westward journeys of Trojans and Americans under divine guidance and points to Vergilian influence extending from the Great Seal to Robert Frost’s poetry.
