VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1989–1990

The present survey of Vergilian Scholarship is the twenty-eighth in the VERGILIUS series. Classical World 68:1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my “Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964–73.” The survey was reprinted in The Classical World Bibliography of Vergil, ed. Walter Donlan, (New York & London: Garland, 1978). Subsequent reviews of scholarship have appeared in VERGILIUS 19 (1973), 20 (1974), 21 (1975), 22 (1976), 23 (1977), 24 (1978), 25 (1979), 26 (1980), 27 (1981), 28 (1982), 29 (1983), 30 (1984), 31 (1985), 32 (1986), 33 (1987), 34 (1988), and 35 (1989).

The 1989–1990 compilation is greatly indebted to the assistance and cooperation of several libraries: Mills Memorial Library, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario; Firestone Library, Princeton University; and the Library of The Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, NJ. Offprints of articles, chapters, and titles for inclusion in the annual VERGILIUS bibliography have been generously provided by readers. Scholars and authors are once again invited to send material and advice to the editor, Alexander G. McKay, Department of Classics, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario, L8S 4M2, Canada.

21. David West, "The Aeneid and the Translator," G&R 37 (1990) 52–64 = Vergilius 35 (1989) 31–46.

Clausen's tribute to the late Sir Roger Mynors provides rare insights into the scholar's career and attitudes. Guglielminetti accents Alfieri's personal interpretations of the Vergilian text in his Italian translation. West's new translation for the Penguin series has brought him to fresh awareness of Vergil's gift of characterisation (Sibyl, Evander, Anchises), and to a new sense of the rhetorical skills and the passion of the poet.

41. H. Schoonhoven, ed., Elegiae in Maecenatem. Groningen 1981.

Franzoi's edition of Copa provides an introduction, critical text, and commentary. Knox (contra Lyne, Ciris, 1978), argues that Ovid (Met. 8.81–82) and the Ciris poet drew on an influential model (Parthenius?) for Scylla's nurse. Schoonhoven provides prolegomena, text and commentary for the neglected Elegiae in Maecenatem.

ECLOGUES: GENERAL

45. M. Owen Lee, Death and Rebirth in Virgil's Arcadia. Albany 1989.

Batstone's summary introduction and reflections provide a directional prelude to the colloquium on "Pastoral Revisions." Alpers continues to bring to light fresh awareness and careful distinctions between Theocritean and Vergilian bucolic poetry. Father Lee's adroit, sympathetic study of the Eclogue-book will excite new interest in the reflective poems.

ECLOGUES: INDIVIDUAL POEMS

46. Brian Atkins, "A Note on Virgil, Eclogues 10, 4–6," LCM 15 (1990) 66.
47. C. A. Faraone, "Clay Hardens and Wax Melts: Magical Role-Reversal in Vergil's Eighth Eclogue," CP 84 (1989) 294–300.

52. Michael Paschalis, "Aliquot . . . videns mirabor aristas?," LCM 15 (1990) 57–58.

Faraone favours paired images in Ecl. 8: a waxen Daphnis, to render him more susceptible, and a clay effigy of the practitioner to stiffen her resolve. Florio argues for subtle relationships between the prologue and epilogue of Ecl. 6; they are embodiments of Vergil's poetical ideology. Goold's paper treats Ecl. 4.62–63 in association with Quintilian, Inst. 9.3.8. Irwin examines the troublesome polychrome sheep with care and discernment in a larger context. Maggiulli considers Ecl. 2.45–55 against a background of Theophrastus and Meleager.

GEORGICS: GENERAL

53. Christine Perkell, The Poet's Truth. A Study of the Poet in Virgil's Georgics. Berkeley 1989.
54. David O. Ross, Jr., Virgil's Elements: Physics and Poetry in the "Georgics". Princeton 1987. Rev: Putnam, CP 84 (1989) 349–354; P. L. Smith, Phoenix 44 (1990) 104–106; Horsfall, BStudLat 19 (1988) 124–127.

Perkell's important study argues that the poet's truth of myth and mystery is in tension with the farmer's praecepta and his values of material survival and utility. The conflict is never resolved and remains a polarity of the text central to its meaning. The poem's tragically beautiful finale highlights the tension between poet's truth and material values in the agricultural domain.

62. Richard F. Thomas (ed.), Virgil: Georgics. Vols. I & II. Cambridge, 1988. Rev: Johnston, Vergilius 35 (1989) 121–124; Fowler, G&R 36 (1989) 235–236; Smith, Phoenix 44 (1990) 106–108.

Ross sees the imago of the pastoral world as deception: the destructive fire was always there; the failure of pastoral Arcadia becomes Libya, then the bitter reality of Scythia. Halperin answers Ross with an alternative reading which provides guidelines for understanding the transformation of the shepherd (Aristaeus) from an object of ambiguous celebration in the Eclogues into a figure of destructiveness, obtuseness and social irresponsibility in the epic.

Heuzé (67) indicates that Vergilian “wonder” (and commiseration) attaches most to cities and their representative humanity. Lesueur discovers that gods in disguise often underscore serious, dramatic situations where fides is challenged. Varro may have been Vergil’s inspiration for the device. O’Hara studies the language and rhetorical context of prophecies in the epic. They generally suppress discouraging details to instigate the struggles of the Aeneadae which may end in death or disaster. Prophecies are a persistent sub-text that stresses the human cost of the “mission” and casts doubt on Jupiter’s promise of imperium sine fine. Deception in the epic, and the deceptiveness of Roman oratory, politics and religion are explored with an eye to the persistent problem of whether the epic is optimistic or pessimistic.

Dyson revives Baehrens (1887) and relocates v. 543 in front of v. 540. Gély tries to reconcile problems relating to Dardanus' origins, and offers an interpretation of Aen. 3.500–505. Habinek examines the two speeches of Anchises, the one eschatological, the other hortatory and traditional, in conjunction with texts of Cicero and the moralists, and with respect to practices and beliefs associated with aristocratic Roman funerals. The first resembles a theoretical lecture delivered by a dogmatic philosopher; the second employs the rhetorical devices of a logos parainetikos. Harrison's analysis of the tragedy of Dido illumines the problematic nature of the Punic queen and detects ignored nuances of the poet's creativity. Horsfall (89) dwells on Vergil's mannered, humorous expression for Chloereus' trousers (Aen. 11.777) and the relevance of armour, language and costume exhibited in Aen. 8.722–723 in recounting the triumph of Octavian, 13–15 August, 29 B.C. Jenkyns' thoughtful essay examines Vergil's use of Arcadians, and the fluctuating, elusive world of Arcadia. Kinsey suggests that fugacem (v. 52) refers to Venus, and that feminea (v. 53) points to cowardice implied by Venus' concealment in a cloud. Moorton applies Goethe's requirement that every part of the drama must represent the whole, to Vergil's Dido story, and detects a dynamic reciprocity in Vergil's metaphorical terms of love and destruction. Moskalow explores the possibilities of guile and gifts in Vergil's wordplay, and probes the possibility of a bilingual pun in dona Danaum. Pitcher interprets Aen. 3.581–582 with Aetna as subject: 'breathes out fire, shakes all Sicily with its rumblings, and covers the sky with smoke.' Saylor studies group vs. individual action in the Nisus and Euryalus episode and elsewhere throughout the epic. Sklenár explores the significance of Neoptolemus as Priam's foil and the poetic structure of the king's death. Thomas aligns Desoille's study, Le Rêve éveillé en psychothérapie. Essai sur la fonction de régulation de l'inconscient (Paris 1945) with Vergil's dreams and visions. Toll suggests that Vergil's appeal to Erato (Aen. 7.37ff) has patriotic rather than erotic associations. The last six books offer a test of national self-understanding, a search for values amid confusion. Zoicas studies fire as prelude to a continuing study of Vergil's poetic 'elements.'

Farron notices that Vergil introduces important characters in the epic with a short description that highlights attributes that are basic for the character's subsequent significant actions and commonly tragic end. Dido's epithets (nescia, inscia) have considerable bearing on episodes where she is involved. Horsfall studies the impact and the ideas and practice of Greek colonization on the Aeneas-story and Vergil's epic of urban settlement and colonization. Makowski senses Vergil's suffusion of the raw material of Homer's lovers with the eros of Plato to produce 'the second greatest love story of the epic.'

Hind suggests that the pendant for the love of Peleus and Thetis on one side of the Portland Vase is the love of Aeneas and Dido. Punic Dido holds the reversed torch, Aeneas is seated, looking back towards her over his shoulder, with Venus (or Juno?) on the right, holding her staff and presiding over the alleged marriage. Both sides of the vase then represent the origins of two world-wars. Wiseman includes Aen. 6.777–795 and 7.170–176 in his guided tour. 173. A. Wojcik, “De Cornelio Gallo in Bucolicis descripto atque in papyris nuper invento,” Meander 43 (1988) 21–37.

Cova’s monograph provides comprehensive coverage of the shadowy Varius. Della Corte reviews the amicitia of Vergil and Horace as revealed in their poetry. Hardie’s perceptive and provocative article examines Ovid’s story of Cadmus and his family, a ktisis that went wrong, and highlights thematic and structural inversions of Vergil’s epic. Johnson assesses the importance of Vergil’s Eclogues for the young Tibullus, their part in his development, and his superb misreading of Vergil’s “sublime, intricate Arcadia.” O’Hara sides with Fairweather (CQ 34 [1984] 167–174) and argues for Gallan amoebean verse reflected in Propertius. Van Nortwick comments on Johnson’s essay (160). Wojcik detects parallels in Eclogues 6 and 10 and the Gallus fragment.

Ahl studies rhetorical style in the epic. Alpers is concerned with mode and form and argues that "by reducing Theocritus' figures and usages to a more homogeneously rendered world of shepherds, Virgil turned bucolic traits into conventions of pastoral" (p. 30). Brenk adduces Greek paradigms for Anchises' offering and eulogy for Marcellus, the Augustan heir. Catto studies Aen. 6.724–751 from the standpoint of diction, the phraseology of disease to describe the divine spirit, and so Vergil refutes the Epicurean view of the mortality of body and soul. Hunter aligns Geo. 3.209–241 with Arg. 2.88–97. Jacobson suggests that Cacus was fashioned after Homer's Polyphemus and the tradition regarding the Cyclopes. Moorton stresses structural and thematic parallels between Jason's first audience with Aeetes in the Argonautica and Aeneas' first audience with Dido. Poucet studies the Aeneid of Dionysius of Halicarnassus (1.45–71), especially the account of Aeneas' voyage (1.49–63) and argues that Varro's influence was minor. Putnam detects irony in the impact of Catullus 11.18–20 on Vergil's simile comparing Rome's pleasure in male offspring with the turreted Magna Mater, happy in her progeny of Gods. Tracy's response to Alpers (188) accents Vergil's statements about the limitations of song, his bleakness of tone, and the ultimate failure of Callimachean song.

Gigante and Capasso examine Vergil's name on a Philodemus papyrus fragment, the first secure notice of Vergil's association with Philodemus' Epicurean work. O'Sullivan examines Donatus Vita 22, Aul. Gell. 17.10.2–3 in conjunction with Aristophanes' vignette of Euripides (relayed to Vergil through Callimachus?) (P. Oxy. 1176).

Geymonat's response to three textual problems involves Ecl. 4.8: quo = cum (quom); Geo. 4.453: non nullius numinis (= of no unimportant deity) ad (rather than ob), ni fata resistant, a potential subjunctive; and Aen. 1.5: passus is taken as a finite form; passus est with a semicolon after Iunonis ob iram. Unde (1.7) is taken as a precise reference to the foundation of Lavinium.

- Bandera treats sacrifice as an epic device in the tradition. Barnard shows that Garcilaso's text was reliant on Vergil, Geo. 4.453–527, with Ovid and Martial as likely references. Bernardo underscores Petrarch's devotion to Vergil, Cicero, and Seneca. Boriaud studies Scarron's mythological burlesque of Vergil and the moral and spiritual chaos of the divine society.

Fisher provides testimonia relating to the destruction of the poet's statue at his Mantuan tomb in 1397. Gnerro highlights classical precedents for invocations to the Muses in Renaissance writers. Howe shows the influence of Aeneid 4 on Jean de La Taille's tragedy Saul le furieux and on Alexandre Hardy's Didon se sacrifiant. Javitch explores commentaries on Ariosto's imitations of Vergil included in the 16th-century edition of Orlando Furioso. Judson notices that the murky atmosphere in van Swanenburgh's paintings of Hades derive from the Sixth Aeneid and from volcanic aspects of the Flaming Fields of Campania.

Newman examines German Baroque treatment of pastoral poetics. Pascucci examines different 'readings' of the close of Eclogue 4 by Cristoforo Landino and Angelo Poliziano. Poikion highlights Vergil as poetic model for the Middle Ages. Quint studies the ideology of Empire bequeathed by Vergil to subsequent epicists. Rudd's review ranges from a Black-figure Attic vase of the 6th century B.C. to works of Matisse, Chagall, Picasso and Michael Ayrton.

Schaller notices revivals of the epic genre in early mediaeval times with attention to The Aachen Epos, and Waltharius. Senis reviews addresses delivered at the celebration of the Tenth Anniversary of Canada’s academic centre in Rome. Segal’s study of Orpheus ranges from Greek origins through Ovid, Vergil, Horace, and Seneca among the ancients, to H(ilda) D(oolittle), Rukeyser, Ashbery, and Rilke. Sichi argues that Dryden’s translation of Vergil’s Pyrrhus snake simile owes as much to Milton as to Vergil. Taylor suggests that Shakespeare mocks Phaer's translation of the epic in Midsummer Night's Dream 5.1.284–289. Thomas's article addresses works on Vergil produced chiefly at the beginning of the 20th century and the end of the 19th century, defines philology, and pronounces it alive and well with a healthy future in store. Stephen Owen responds with "Philology's Discontent," CLSA 27 (1990) 75–78.
