VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1993–1994

The present survey of Vergilian Scholarship is the thirty-second in the VERGILIUS series. Classical World 68:1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my "Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964–73." The survey was reprinted in The Classical World Bibliography of Vergil, ed. Walter Donlan (New York & London: Garland 1978). Subsequent reviews have appeared in VERGILIUS 19 (1973) to 39 (1993).

The 1993–1994 compilation is greatly indebted to the assistance and cooperation of several libraries: Mills Memorial Library, McMaster University; New York Public Library; and The Hillman Library, University of Pittsburgh. Notices, offprints and facsimiles of articles, chapters, and titles have been generously provided by readers. Scholars and authors are cordially invited to send material and advice to the editor, Alexander G. McKay, Department of Classics, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario L8S 4M2, Canada. FAX: 1–(905)–526–9245.

Wills's article treats Eclogue 3.1 and Numitorius' parody in Antibucolica (Donatus, Vita 43) under three headings: The Rustic Question, The Archaic Question, and the Comic Question, (Terence, And. 763), along with the major influence of Theocritus' fourth and fifth Idylls. Menalcas' question reappears in Eclogue 5.87 indicating its emblematic importance as "striking introduction to the amoebean contumelies with their comedic overtones" (11). Paschalis studies Ecl. 6.82–84 and provides additional evidence for the allusion to Hyacinthus and a hitherto unnoticed allusion to Daphne's story implicit in laurus (83). The stories of Hyacinthus and Daphne at the close of Silenus' recital accent the themes of metamorphosis and love.

Rampioni seeks to reconcile the saecula aurea with Octavian's wars. Jenkyns studies Georgics 2.145–146 and argues that a pessimistic interpretation will not stand and that the progressive interpretation is broadly right; however, there is still the necessity for "hard work." Watson provides detailed arguments in support of Mynors's commentary (Oxford 1990).

Heinze's 1903 study, never truly superseded, reappears in a clear, unpretentious English translation to captivate a new generation of scholars and students. Horsfall renews and recalls the polemics prompted by Alfonso Traina [RFIC

Froesch highlights the initial letters of Aeneid 1.1: AUC (ab urbe condita) and AUG(ustus). West deals with Vergil's puzzling reference to the Actian Games (Aen. 3.80–81) and suggests a subtext: "Even in the matter of athletic games on which the Greeks so pride themselves, we Trojan/Romans were the inventors."

(58) The lustration to Jupiter at Aen. 3.279, was properly assessed by R. B. Lloyd in 1954. The dedicated shield taken from victorious Greeks highlights Octavian's memorial with the display of battering rams from the fleet of Antony and Cleopatra. The little city at Aen. 3.276 prefigures Octavian's great new city of Nicopolis. Evander's anecdotage about Hercules and Cacus (Aen. 8.200–203), is a Vergilian typological ploy: Hercules as maximus ultor, Aeneas as second savior and a second Hercules, and Augustus' triple triumph in 28 B.C. are powerful adumbrations in the Vergilian panegyric. Heuzé detects three levels in Dido's suicide: tragic, historical, and magical. Laudizi examines the Deiphobus encounter as culmination in reverse order of Aeneas' ruptures with the past and of his progress towards the future, and as token of Virgil's melancholic convictions regarding the human condition. Lowenstam analyses poetic diction and motif to determine the meaning of the ecphrasis. Maier accents the contrast between Dido's turmoil and the placid natural world (Aen. 4.522–532). O'Hara emends aut quicquam mihi dulce meorum to at quicquam, thereby exposing the inadequacy of the gift of immortality.

Crupi's textual study retains Servian fraudem not laudem at 708 as antiqua et vera lectio. Hamilton detects intriguing possibilities in a Promethean Dido. O'Hara makes the tentative but appealing suggestion that Vergil alludes to the unfortunate Cornelius Gallus in three passages in Aeneid 4: 69–73, 345–6, 487–91. Gallus' suicide (27 or 26 B.C.) after Augustus withdrew his friendship "would have added special resonance to the story of Dido" (23) for Vergil and the emperor. Perkell argues that the text generates ambiguity about Dido's death; contradictory responses by readers underscore the inability to gain a single "correct reading."

Briquel studies Vergil's account of prehistoric Latium, prior to Aeneas' advent, a version that deviates remarkably from that of Varro and Dionysius of Halicarnassus. Vergilian variants include Sicani (instead of Siculi), and immigrants instead of indigenous folk. The Aborigeni are indigenous not immigrants as in Cato, Varro, and Dionysius. Both of Vergil's departures are likely products of Augustan theory fostered by the circle of Maecenas. Horsfall examines Vergil's primitive Italy from the standpoint of terminology, heroic monarchy, catalogues, and geographic coherence. He accents the exigencies of variatio and dramatic effect. Vergil must have consulted prose sources for historical and geographical details, but, unhappily, none survive.

Anderson's articles accent Ovidian variations on Vergilian form and manner. He is particularly concerned with gesture and prayer in the Aeneid and with abortive gesture and prayer in the Metamorphoses. "What (Ovid) does with the frustrated gesture of Vergil's Cassandra (Aen. 2.405–406) and with the pleading hand of Turnus (Aen. 12.930–932, 938–939), which he perverts into the bleeding stump of Pentheus, epitomizes the grim inefficacy of prayer in the Metamorphoses." (177) Desmond regards Ovid's Heroides 7 as representative of readers' response to Vergil's epic version. Privitera examines Ovid, Amores 3.9.7–14, and Metamorphoses 15.435–438. Scarcia examines Aen. 4.518ff and Metamorphoses 7.182–183. Tissol studies Metamorphoses 13 and 14 where Ovid replaces Vergilian thematic hallmarks for a satirical reworking of the prophetic books, Aeneid 3 and 6, and eliminates cosmic order in favor of the universal prevalence of flux.

Conte studies the programmatic proem interwoven with and superimposed on the thematic proem (Georgics 1.1–5; 3.3–22; and Buc. 6), evident earlier in Ennius and Lucretius, DRN 4. Callimachus provided a compositional framework which Latin poets transformed to create a new proemial institution wherein the middle proem performs a programmatic function. Loupiac studies labor in the life and work of Vergil. Novara examines 58 tibicines in the epic: eight incomplete verses attaching to Turnus and four associated with tragic deaths reinforce the vis tragica of the epic narrative and of history.

Albis detects echoes of Euripides' Alexander (in the Ennian translation) in Vergil's Sinon/Palamedes episode. Geymonat's article studies Aen. 3.692–714. Krevans argues that Vergil's use of Ilias' nightmare (concerning Mars) in Aeneid 4.465–468 accents the thwarted destiny of Dido as civic leader after her seduction. Most regards Homer's Nekyia as a catalogue of the varieties of epos produced in archaic Greece: Hesiodic moral-didactic epic and genealogical catalogues, Homeric monumental epics, and cyclical epics. Recourse (and reference) to the poetic past of the genre persists in Vergil and in Silius Italicus. Papangelis associates Vergil's Evander and the cherished Pallas with Apollonius Rhodius, Argon. 1.95–100. Pollman provides a parallel study of Homer, Odyssey 19.562–567 and Aeneid 6.893–896.

Ital. Punica 13.94–380, and aligns Punica 3.895 with Vergil, Aen. 6.897–900. Hooley aligns Georgics 2.25–26 with Persius, Satires 4.39–41.

Nicastri assesses portions of the Suetonius-Donatus Life for accuracy and veracity: Plotia-Hieria, recitationes, the final trip, and the will. Nicastri rejects the “traditional” instruction to burn the epic and Vergil’s reluctance to publish the epic. Scarcia discovers a topos in Sid. Colakis argues that Burgess systematically subverts Aeneas' leadership qualities and heroic destiny in his antihero, Richard Ennis, sergeant and amateur musician in the Army Vocational and Cultural Corps ("Arma Virumque Cano" Corps) stationed in Gibraltar in 1943. Ziolkowski's comparative analysis highlights American and European writing between 1914 and 1945 when Vergilian patterns, images and values surfaced impressively in works by Auden, Broch, Eliot, Frost and Gide, Tate, Ungaretti, Valéry and Wilder.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Professors Richard E. Prior of Furman University and Christopher M. McDonough of UNC-Greensboro have, with the encouragement of Bolchazy-Carducci Publishers, undertaken to produce a facing translation of Servius' commentary on the Aeneid with notes. Although the primary aim of this project is to make Servius available to Latinless readers of Virgil, we hope that it will be useful to Latin students at the secondary and post-secondary levels as well. Please forward any comments or suggestions toward this end to Prof. Prior, Dept. of Classical and Modern Languages, Furman University, Greenville, SC 29613.
