VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 1996-1997

BY

ALEXANDER G. MCKAY

In Memoriam—Viktor Pöschl

28 January 1910 Graz; 1 February 1997 Heidelberg

THE PRESENT SURVEY OF VERGILIAN SCHOLARSHIP is the thirty-fifth in the VERGILIUS series. Classical World 68:1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society, Inc., contains my "Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964-1973." The survey was reprinted in The Classical World Bibliography of Vergil, Walter Donlan, ed., New York & London: Garland 1978. Subsequent reviews have appeared in Vergilius 19 (1973) to 42 (1996).

The 1996-1997 compilation is greatly indebted to the assistance and cooperation of several libraries: Mills Memorial Library, McMaster University, The Robarts Library of the University of Toronto, and the Library of the Institute of Classical Studies, London, UK. Notices, offprints, and facsimiles of articles, chapters, and titles have been generously provided by authors and readers. Scholars, authors, editors and publishers are cordially invited to send material and advice to the editor, Alexander G. McKay, Department of Classics, McMaster University, Hamilton, Ontario L8S 4M2, Canada. FAX: 905 526 9245.

N.B. "AA.VV." = auctores varii.

28. Klaus Sallmann, "Poesie und Magie: Vergils 8. Ekloge." ZAnt 45 (1995) 287-302.

Cupaiuolo studies the formal structure and counterpoint of the Silenus Eclogue (6) and highlights idiosyncrasies common to Alexandrian poetry and sophisticated Latin verse. Egan argues that the final pair of quatrains in Bucolic 7 provide a tour de force of elaborate bilingual word-play that identifies song and love, singer and lover, with trees; Thyrsis simply cannot match the onomastic versatility of Corydon. Kyriakou accents Callimachean traits in Eclogues 6 and 10. Meulder reviews familiar historical testimony relevant to the “Messianic” Eclogue. Perkell's analysis of Eclogue 10 offers fresh incentive to its proper interpretation. Sallmann provides a thorough revisionist study of Eclogue 8.

GEORGICS: GENERAL

29. J. Scott Campbell, “Labor improbus and Orpheus’ furor: hubris in the Georgics,” AC 65 (1996) 231-238.

30. P. Heuzé, “In tenui labor, remarques sur la poétique de l’amplification dans les Géorgiques,” REL 73 (1995) 115-123.

Campbell highlights features of decline, from Saturnian innocence to Jovian decadence, from agrarian idyll to imperial conquest and civil war. His interpretation of the Orpheus myth at the close of Georgics 4 corroborates his reading of labor improbus “which attempts to reconcile Roman greatness with Roman self-destruction, the loss of innocence of the Golden Age with the dubious progress of the Iron Age.” (238).

GEORGICS: INDIVIDUAL POEMS

34. S. Harrison, “Yew and Bow: Vergil Georgics 2.448,” HSCP 96 (1994) 201-202.

35. A. S. Hollis, “Octavian in the Fourth Georgic,” CQ 46 (1996) 305-308.

36. Matthew Leigh, “Vergil, Georgics 1. 302,” PLLS 9 (1996) 123-126.

Harrison entertains and enlightens with his study of translingual word play—taxus (yew), toxon (bow). Boldrer studies ms. variants (duram and validam). Leigh expands V.’s allusion to winter’s power to draw the farmer to the hearth and convivium, to include wine.

44. G. Stroppini, "Amour, dialogue et unité dans l'oeuvre de Virgile (Bucoliques, Géorgiques, Énéide I-IV)," LEC 65 (1997) 97-115.

Foster's study of the hero's name accents the associations of Aineias with ainos "dread, terrible," and ainos "tale, story" (cf. epainos praise, fame). Aen. 12, 938-9, acer in armis balances 12, 946-7, ira/terribilis. Pietas, troublesome to critics, is part of the hero's ainos / ainigmos. Knox studies the applications of the epithet saevus/saeva in gods and heroes of the epic. Inter alia, Aeneas shares the savage grief of Juno at 12, 945. Stroppini studies the omnipresence of the duality and mutability of love in V.'s poetry and argues for a less pessimistic reading.

68. Oleg Nikitinski, "Zu Vergil Aen. 10, 366," RhM 139 (1996) 191-192.

Dyson argues that Vergil chose to be inconsistent regarding septima aetas in order to highlight the theme of sacrificial death. Harrison is convinced that the Caesar of Aen. 1, 286 is unambiguously Augustus. Bliss interprets Aen. 2, 311-312, proximus ardet/Ucalegon, a detail in Vergil's reference to two houses, one of a Trojan councillor, lit. "Mr What-me-worry?", the other of Deiphobus, a son of Priam. Both are enveloped in destructive fire, and indicate "the incomprehensible justice of what must be interpreted as the will of heaven" (Austin, Oxford 1964, ix). Vergil realized that a catastrophe would consume "virtuous, wicked, wise and foolish" indiscriminately. Egan suggests that if Aeneas did not really see Helen cowering at the Vesta temple, the removal of the "Helen episode" is unnecessary. The verses are authentic. Hardy reassesses Anchises' inaccurate reading of the Delian riddle; the Penates provide the corrective reading: the human mother (Crete) has to be abandoned for the promise of a destined motherland (Italia). Khan argues that hospitium and pietas are common to all the main episodes of Aeneas' odyssey, and that there is an intriguing relationship between the "political" episodes involving the Harpies and Achaemenides. Both deal with an enemy, but in dramatically different terms. Fernandelli assesses the solemn funeral of Polydorus as a Euripidean element and as closure to the Iloupersis. Deschamps vindicates Somnus as promoter of Palinurus to the status of hero. O'Hara counters Cockwood's article (Phoenix 46 (1992) 362-365) and textual emendation to have Aeneas exit through the gate of true dreams; the received text (however cryptic) should remain intact. Manetti detects a person rather than a transmitter in Deiphobe. Cristofoli assumes pious amor (in the Epicurean sense) between Euryalus and Nisus, Salius and Patronus, Elymus and Panope. Nikitinski prefers aspera aquis natura over aspera equis natura (Aen. 10, 366).

75. Stephen Christopher Smith, Perspective and Prophecy: The Uses of Achilles in the Aeneid. Diss., University of Virginia, 1996.

Álvarez pleads for the composite unity of the Dido episode; Book 4 cannot be isolated; it is neither tragedy nor epyllion. Dyson's article examines Dido's shifting association with Epicureanism: the philosophy of ataraxy was finally inadequate because it could neither explain nor combat the reality of pain and evil. Michels explored the "bigness" and "figura" of Aeneas in the eyes of others who visualize the hero according to their own taste not according to physical characteristics. Polk senses a partial Penelope in Dido: "but Dido weakens and falls, bringing down her kingdom, while Penelope resists." (49)

Schiebe's in-depth study treats Evander, Faunus, Janus, Latinus, Picus, and with particular zeal, Saturn.

Caputo's guide to Cumae and its environs is a cleverly designed and lavishly illustrated companion for scholars and visitors. A review appears in Vergilius 43 (1997). Clark studies Cumaean-Avernian dwelling places of the Sibyl, the (pseudo-) Grotta della Sibilla's progress from military tunnel to Sibyl's cave, and its mediaeval conversion into a public therapeutic spa, and offers a meticulous study of the responses of Conrad of Querfurt, Bishop of Hildesheim (1195), and of Petrarch (1343) to the locale. Clark also provides a thematic, syntactic and lexical study of the description of the Sibyl's Cave by Agathias in Byzantine times, when it was a casualty of the siege by Narses. Franklin's compendium of Vergilian graffiti at Pompeii provides a valuable teaching resource. Paliotti's "popular" article is richly illustrated with color plates and line-drawings of architectural reconstructions of the Cumaean acropolis and lower city, and of the Roman forum, replete with Domitianic Capitolium, Aedes of the Augustales, and Antonine Baths.

Maecenas crowds Augustus for the limelight. Belloni aligns coin-types with political themes in the Augustan poets. Hardie argues that Vergil's (and Horace's) paradoxes reflect the continuing instabilities and contradictions of the historical process.

Doblhofer underscores Vergilian (and Horatian) responses to imperial expansion and their relevance to British imperialism. Fabre-Serris traces echoes of the polemic between Vergil and Gallus over the Hellenistic vogue of amoris dolores in Bucolics 2 and 10, with reverberations in Propertius 1, 20, and in Ovid's Metamorphoses. Huxley's address examines the Ovidian hexameter, the Eclogues, where basic differences surface between the Vergilian and Ovidian approach, the Georgics, where Vergil's genius is paramount and distinct (the poets' handling of the Orpheus and Eurydice legend is instructive), and Ovid's "potted version" of the Aeneid where pietas and Dido vie for attention. Finally, on Ovid's style, Huxley offers a reproof to Ovid's detractors who "blame him for extravagance in language which is judged far more sympathetically if it occurs in Virgil, or because Ovid is usually so limpid and crystal-clear that they dismiss the very possibility of hidden depths." (102). Varius Rufus has captured the spotlight several times: Leigh's "reading" of Varius' Thyestes as applicable to Marc Antony, is provocative and instructive. Mazzoni's "reconstruction" of the historical Anser is masterful. Nagore de Zand studies Augustan themes and “resonances” in Horace Epodes 16 and 2, and Vergil’s Eclogue 5 and Georgics 2, 458-540.

Barchiesi and Edmunds provide introductory and exploratory manoeuvres with intertextuality in Roman epic and elsewhere. Both offer guidelines and caution for enthusiastic critics. Desy returns to the Laudes Italiae (Georgics 2, 136-176) and to the War in Italy (Aen. 10) and detects ironic undertones and subversive criticism of Octavian's "victories" in Aeneas' behavior. Huxley's eloquence matches his theme. Parker treats Vergil's exploitation of the book endings, the compulsory pauses between Books 4 & 5, 1 and 2, 8 and 9. Pontes' detailed analysis of Aeneid 6, 122-123 is a tour de force and entirely convincing. Thornton studies the sympathetic implications of the injured deer motif for Dido and Turnus; the innate cruelty of the individual is accented by the act of injuring the blameless deer.

154. L. Zurli, "Paolino di Pella ed Enea," BStudLat 26 (1996) 559-567.

Nugent's study of Hypsipyle's narrative of the Lemnian massacre in Statius' Thebaid focuses on Hypsipyle's reliability as narrator and on the indeterminacy of her father's fate. Nugent concludes that the ambiguous nature of Hypsipyle's relation to her father, Thoas, corresponds to the nature of Statius' relationship to Vergil, his epic predecessor.

Dyer's conclusions are brisk and sensible, that "Vergil seems to have had the poet Parthenius of Nicaea as his grammaticus, at least in Greek, during his education in Cremona in Transpadane Gaul, where Parthenius probably at the end of the Mithridatic wars was a slave in the household of the poet C. Helvius Cinna." (23) Ruiz de Elvira, critical of conjectural criticism, vindicates the authenticity of the datum which is evidenced first in Pliny the Elder.

Bettinzoli provides a comparative study, with texts, of Poliziano's poem and Vergil's Georgics. Canitz studies the Scots Aeneid as the political document of a nation that has come of age and is asserting its national identity. Cazes offers a comparative study of Inclyta Aeneis and Vergil's epic. Clark demonstrates close ties between Vergil's epic and Shakespeare's The Tempest, and traces a network of Vergilian motifs (e.g. death by drowning) that links The Bard's plays from different points in his career. Herreros Tabernero studies negative assessments of Aeneas in two mythological handbooks of Spain's Golden Age: the Filosofía Secreta of Juan Pérez de Moya, and Baltasar de Vitoria's El Teatro de los Dios e la Gentilidad. Lindheim studies the characterization of Spenser's Hobbinoe in conjunction with Vergil's Bucolics. Giuliani compares Caro's Italian translation of Vergil's epic with Leopardi's effort. Smith examines homosexual traits in Vega's characterization of Salicio.

Puente detects the influence of Vergil's Aristaeus episode (Georgics 4, 315ff) in Góngora's episode of the pilgrim's welcome by the fishman's daughters (Soledad 2, 208-551). Sellstrom tracks intertextuality involving Ariosto, Orlando Furioso, and Vergil. Venuti's article treats Sir John Denham's translation of the Vergilian epic and its links with contemporary royalism. Verbart draws parallels between Milton's Adam and Eve and Vergil's Aeneas and Dido.

Cristóbal shows that Alonso de Ercilla's Araucana draws topics and conventions from Vergil's epic. Duclos provides a tour and appreciation of Hoare's 18th century landscaped property at Stourhead (Wiltshire), his munus to Vergil, a reflection of his anguish over deaths in his family, and "an attempt to find consolation by transposing Virgil's epic poem into physical reality."
