Vergilian Bibliography 2009–2010

Shirley Werner

This survey of Vergilian scholarship is the forty-eighth in the Vergilius series. Classical World 68.1 (1974), published in association with The Vergilian Society, Inc., contains Alexander G. McKay's "Recent Work on Vergil: A Bibliographical Survey, 1964-73." Subsequent reviews by Professor McKay appeared in Vergilius 19 (1973)–52 (2005). I have continued the tradition of his work starting with my survey in Vergilius 53 (2006).

The 2009-2010 compilation is indebted to the print and electronic resources of the William R. Perkins Library, Duke University and to those of L'Année philologique. Readers are encouraged to send material or notices to Dr. Werner, the Editor of the Annual Bibliography, at the following address:

CUMMINGS DISCUSSES Abraham Fleming's translations of the Eclogues (1575 and 1589). Sir John Denham's translations of passages from Aen. 2-6 (1636 and 1668) and Sidney Godolphin and Edmund Waller's translation of the Passion of Dido for Aeneas (1658) are edited with critical introductions by Sowerby. The book also includes an appendix of earlier translators. Perez Fernandez discusses the early modern English translation of Aen. 2 and 4 made by Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey (1517/19-1547).

GOLZ OBSERVES that references to Dido in the second act of Shakespeare's The Tempest have garnered speculation by readers and playgoers. One motive for Dido's inclusion may be "related to a system of wordplay involving shuffled repetitions of the sounds of letters and syllables. ...[T]his essay focuses on the name of Dido as sound, and as alphabetical letters, situating the name within a set of wordplay practices extending across the genres of drama, prose fiction, poetry, and folk ballad."

DRAWING ON EVIDENCE from Aen. 9.83-92 and on a sculptural frieze from a Julio-Claudian monument that has never been identified securely, Bell identifies two figures that were depicted on the pediment of the temple of the Magna Mater on the Palatine. The figure who holds the pine branch may be a personification of Mount Ida; her counterpart on the left-hand side of the pediment may be a personification of the Palatine.

BETTENWORTH EXAMINES Fast. 5.621-62, which depends especially on the Aeneid. Butler explores the relationship between poetry and death, body and song, and tradition and immortality in Vergil and in Ovid. Dominicy observes that Propertius 4.7.23-6 makes numerous intertextual links to the Aeneid.

FRANCHET D'ESPÈREY SHOWS that Quintilian treats apostrophe as both a figure of thought, with examples from oratory, and a figure of speech, with examples from Vergil in which the narrator addresses characters of the poem (e.g. 9.3.23-7, citing Aen. 4.408 and 10.791).

CONSOLINO DISCUSSES the influence of Vergil's description of Priam's death at Aen. 2.554-8 on Iuvencus' description of the death of John the Baptist. R. Green argues that there is no compelling evidence to abandon the thesis that the elder Proba—Faltonia Betitia Proba—wrote the Cento. Jacobson shows that Dracontius Laud. dei 1.633ff. and 3.171-87 are influenced by images of the miraculous fire associated with Ascanius in Aen. 2. Krauter concedes that comparison of Luke's Gospel and Acts with the Aeneid is illuminating. Judging, however, by the similarities, parallels, and overlaps, but also the marked differences, we cannot conclude that the Aeneid was a direct influence on Luke and Acts. Kugelmeier discusses a Greek translation of the fourth Eclogue preserved in a passage of Eusebius. Rücker detects allusion to Vergil in Ausonius' letters. Scibetta posits that Conf. 5.15 alludes to Bks. 2-4 of the Aeneid.

ADKIN OBSERVES that, although his edition of the scholia in the Codex Bembinus is "a piece of exact and finished scholarship", Sir James Mountford was unable to identify two highly flawed citations of Vergil. Jakobi 2009b discusses a textual problem at Schol. Veron. Aen. 10.200. Scappaticcio discusses the fact that Marius Victorinus draws examples from Aen. 2.413 and 8.83 of mistakes students may make in word division (“erepta e virginis ira” vs. “ereptae virginis ira” and “conspicitur sus” vs. “conspicit ursus”).

BAÑOS STUDIES the use by Antonio de Nebrija of the form Vergilius (Vergilio in Castilian), that from 1495 onwards comes to replace Virgilius-Virgilio by the influence of Angelo Poliziano. Bartosik-Velez discusses Peter Martyr d'Anghiera (1457-1526) and his Decades de Orbe Novo (about Columbus' discovery of the New World, and drawing a connection between Aeneas and Columbus). Feddern writes about the Portuguese poet Luís de Camões (ca. 1524-1580). Gardner offers a Latin edition and English translation of Marco Girolamo Vida's Christiad (1543), an epic account of the life of Christ modeled on Vergil's Aeneid. Mateo Decabo considers the tragedy Didon se sacrifiant by the French dramatist Alexandre Hardy (ca. 1572-1632). Polleichtner observes that Marco Girolamo Vida (poet and Italian cleric, 1485-1566) not only adapted Vergil's poetry but also the works of Latin technical writers such as Cato and Varro. Roling shows how Ecl. 5, with its reworking of Theocritus, is the formal model for the triple theme of monument, epitaph, and resurrection, which became a bucolic tradition. Tucker writes on the Centones ex Virgilio by Lelio Capilupi. Wells "explores the continuation of the Virgilian marriage plot in works such as Mapheus Vegius's 'Supplement to Virgil's Aeneid'" and "culminates in a reading of Ariosto's treatment of this late-Virgilian legacy". Wiener argues for Vergilian influence on the Latin lyric Amores of Conradus Celtis (Conrad Pickel, 1459-1508).

FAWCETT ARGUES that the Orphic singer of Milton's ode is modelled on Vergil's Orpheus. Kilgour 2008a discusses Milton's tragedy, Samson agonistes, in connection with his references to Turnus; Kilgour 2008b discusses Satan in Milton's works. Maréchaux discusses Vergilian influence on Les aventures de Télémaque (1699) by François de Salignac de La Mothe-Fénelon, a work composed to educate the Duc de Bourgogne, grandson of Louis XIV.

POWER OBSERVES that, while the Georgics have long been acknowledged as the major model for "The Art of Walking the Streets of London" by John Gay (1685-1732), Horace's Ars Poetica "also provides a crucial model for Gay's exploration of the poet's place in the world." Schubert writes about the adaptations of the Aeneid by Friedrich von Schiller (1759-1805) and Aloys Blumauer (1755-1798). Tschiedel discusses the work of Charlotte von Stein (1742-1827).

STOFFLER CONSIDERS a work by the Dutch painter Paul Bril (1554-1626). Suerbaum 2006 discusses four etchings by Jean-Michel Moreau le Jeune (1741-1814) which illustrated the four volumes of Jacques Delille's French translation of the Aeneid (1804). Welch discusses Purcell's opera. Ziolkowski's book includes discussion of the musical notation (neumes) provided to some passages of the Aeneid between the late 10th-late 12th cents.
