Gagliardi gives a history of the translation of the Eclogues into Italian from the Fascist era to the present day, observing that the comparison of translations reveals diverse approaches to poetry and to classical culture. Holzberg's Aeneis (2015) contains an introduction (9–40); Latin text and facing German translation; a note on the Latin text of this edition (675–76); a commentary (677–730); an essay, “Aeneas und Augustus,” by Markus Schauer (731–59); and a bibliography (760–66). Perret's Énéide (2013) contains an introduction, Latin text and facing French translation, and notes by Paul Veyne. Trevizam's Geórgicas (2013) includes a Latin text and facing Portuguese translation. Holzberg's edition of the Eclogues and Georgics (2016) offers a Latin text and facing German translation of the poems preceded by an introduction (7–40) and followed by a note on the Latin text of this edition (255–56), a commentary (257–98), an essay, “Pascua und Rura von der Antike bis in die Gegenwart: Zum Fortwirken der Bucolica und Georgica Vergils” (299–327), and a bibliography (328–34). In their German translation and edition Leben auf dem Lande (2013), von Albrecht edited, translated, and wrote commentary for the Bucolica and Schönberger for the Georgica; the edition contains an afterword by von Albrecht. Virgile: Oeuvres complètes (2015) includes notes, a Latin text and facing French translation of the Bucoliques and Énéide by Dion and Heuzé and of the Géorgiques by Dion and Michel, and notes, Latin text, and a French translation of the Appendix Vergiliana. In Zpěvy rolnické (2016), Kurzová translates the Georgics into Czech. Ganiban's introduction to Aen. 1–6 offers a Latin text with commentary in English.

- Vesperini, Pierre. "La poésie didactique dans l'antiquité: Une invention des modernes." Anabases 21 (2015): 25–38.

Heuzé discusses the reception of the Georgics beginning with Seneca, Epist. 86. Vesperini observes that the notion of didactic epic did not exist in antiquity, as it does not apply to any definable thematic or metrical category. The concept dates from the modern distinction between pleasure and instruction originating in the eighteenth century.

GEORGICS: INDIVIDUAL POEMS

- Ambühl, Annemarie. "Sleepless Orpheus: Insomnia, Love, Death and Poetry from Antiquity to Contemporary Fiction." In Sciola and Walde, Sub imagine somni, 259–84.

- Perotti, Pier Angelo. "Qualche osservazione a margine della scena di Elena (Verg., Aen. 2, 567–588)." Latomus 73 (2014): 629–43.

Funari focuses on Aeneas's wanderings in Aen. 3. Giusti discusses the possibility, as suggested in ancient exegesis, that "saxa ... Aras" at Aen. 1.109–10 alludes to the historian Philinus's claim regarding the violation of a treaty between Rome and Carthage before the outbreak of the First Punic War.

AENEID: INDIVIDUAL BOOKS VII–XII

- Barchiesi, Alessandro. "Implicazioni di storia romana nell'oratoria di Turno (Aen. XI 428)." In Fedeli and Günther, Virgilian Studies, 15–25.
- Cairo, María Emilia. "La profecía de Fauno en Eneida 7.81–101: Ambigüedad e interpretación." In Galán and Buisel, La adivinación en Roma, 127–43.

Pudill discusses quotations from Vergil that appear on denarii introduced in Britain in the century from the reign of Carausius to that of Constantine I or Magnus Maximus and on medallions issued under Carausius and Allectus. Schmidt looks particularly at agriculture in Vergil and at economic themes in Horace. Szerwiniack studies conceptions of the shape of the city of Troy in Vergil and in two twelfth-century poets, Joseph of Exeter and Benoît de Sainte-Maure, who were inspired not by Vergil but by the Latin poem Daretis Phrygii De excidio Troiae historia.

Biggs argues that “Livy’s depiction of Fabius’ delay in the mountain pastures of Campania is enriched by a nexus of imagery, language, and landscape central to the Latin pastoral genre as shaped by Vergil’s Eclogues” (281). Foster observes that Horace’s description at Odes 4.1.25–28 of the double chorus of boys and girls dancing the tripudium responds to Vergil’s description of the Salii at Aen. 8.285–302. Gagliardi, “Formosus,” suggests that the epithet formosus, frequent in the Eclogues but rare in Latin poetry before Vergil, may reflect the influence of Gallus; comparison of passages in Propertius provides further evidence for this argument. Lowe concentrates on evidence from the Aeneid and from Ovid’s Metamorphoses.

Adkin, “Quis,” explores the significance of the acrostic “undis” at Ecl. 9.34–38. Gagliardi argues that the intertextual linking of Georg. 4.566 with Ecl. 1.1 indicates an ideological continuity in regard to his Augustan panegyric. Jenkyns discusses how the concept of Rome as a city inscribed on a primeval landscape is developed in Vergil’s Georgics and books 7–8 of the Aeneid. Laterza identifies an imperfect acrostic at Aen. 7.53–57 involving the name Amata.

Baraz argues that Calpurnius's conception of nature as obstructive and on the importance of silence for poetic composition responds to moments of discord between man and nature in Vergil's Eclogues. Berrens discusses the influence of Aen. 1.430–36 on Seneca's Epist. 84. Dean's dissertation studies Perpetua's Passio, Proba's Cento, and Egeria's Itinerarium for what they can reveal about an educational system that enabled female authorship. Goodfellow's title quotes Martial 8.55.19. Graverini argues that in describing Lucius's movement from Greece to Rome at Met. 11.26.1 Apuleius indirectly involves Africa through a web of clues that connect Hypata, Byrrhena, and Lucius with Carthage, Dido, and Aeneas. Hinds discusses Ausonius's acknowledgement, in his secular cento, of Proba's Christian cento. Le Doze discusses Aen. 12.821–28, 834–40, and other passages. Leroux's contribution explores the treatment of Iris in Ovid and Seneca based on their source in Vergil. McCutcheon discusses the imagery of disrupted pastoral and agrarian landscapes and characters in Vergil's oeuvre and in Lucan. Power argues that Tacitus's account of Galba's end need not allude directly to Vergil's Priam. Quartarone considers the word umbra in Vergil, Ovid, Horace, and the Culex. Rudoni discusses intertextual echoes of Vergil and Lucretius in Eumolpus's poem. Schottenius Cullhed discusses Jerome, Epist. 53, where Jerome compares incompetent biblical exegesis to Vergilian and Homeric centos, with perhaps pointed reference to the work of Proba.

Caldini Montanari observes that Vergil's "cadentia sidera" alludes to Sappho, fr. 168, and indicates not the end of night but midnight. Coppola points to details in the Aeneid that may reflect elements of the Alexander legend as transmitted by Lycophron; these, she argues, should be read in the context of Augustan propaganda. Fernández Corte considers the intertextual resonances of Vergil's "sus" at Aen. 8.83 with Lucretius and Horace. Gagliardi, "Alberi e amore," observes that Vergil uses tree imagery to allude to Theocritus and Gallus; in "LEcl. 10" she remarks on the influence of Bion, Moschus, and Gallus. Lasagna focuses on the motif of traveling upstream as it is developed in Aen. 7.36 and 8.86–101 and in Apollonius, Argonautica 2.1260–85. Pellacani argues that the syntactic ambiguity of the phrase "ab Ioue principium Musae" at Ecl. 3.60 alludes both to Theocritus 17.1 and to Cicero, Aratus, fr. 1 Soubiran, with its Hesiodic subtext. Wesolowski discusses tree symbolism in Theocritus, Vergil, and Longus in the context of the disappointment of personal desires.

Kiss, "Catullo," considers Servius's testimony, echoed by the humanist Guglielmo da Pastrengo (1290–1362), concerning the gender of pumex at Catullus 1.2 and concludes that, even though Servius is not reliable, it is intrinsically credible that pumex may belong to a group of nouns of the third declension in -ex or -is that are attested in both genders. In "Un passo perduto," Kiss discusses Servius's paraphrase, in his commentary on Georg. 2.95, of some polemical remarks made by Catullus concerning "uva Raetica." These words belong to no known poem and may derive from a poem by Catullus now lost but known to Servius.

Fenoglio investigates the Italian cultural context in which the English priest Daniel Halsworth (1557/8–c. 1596) translated the Eclogues into classical Greek (Turin, 1591). Freyburger-Galland discusses the editiones principes of Vergil's Eclogues (1469) and Theocritus's Idylls (1480). Schmidt argues that the influence of Arcadia as a symbol derives from the novel Arcadia written by the Italian humanist Jacopo Sannazaro (1458–1530) rather than from Vergil's Eclogues. He maintains that Bruno Snell's influential article "Arkadien, die Entdeckung einer geistigen Landschaft," A&A 1 (1945): 26–31 interprets Vergil from a conception of Arcadia altered by modern sensibilities.

TWENTIETH CENTURY

- Pogorzelski, Randall J. Virgil and Joyce: Nationalism and Imperialism in the Aeneid and Ulysses. Wisconsin Studies in Classics. Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 2016.
- Takács, László. "The Eclogues of Miklós Radnóti: A Twentieth-Century Vergil." Acta Antiqua Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 53 (2013): 311–22.

Takács writes on the influence of the Georgics on the Hungarian poet Miklós Radnóti (1909–44).

TWENTY-FIRST CENTURY

- Stevens, Benjamin Eldon. "Virgilian Underworlds in A. S. Byatt's The Children's Book." CRJ 8 (2016): 529–53.
- Thomas, Richard F. "Aeneas in Baghdad." In Fedeli and Günther, Virgilian Studies, 453–73.

A. S. Byatt's The Children's Book was published in 2009. Thomas considers Vergil's work "in the context of the neoconservative movement that since (and somewhat before) September 11, 2001 has been anxious to find, particularly in the texts of classical antiquity, justifications for ... ‘neo-imperialism’” (454).

VERGIL AND THE ARTS

- Riedel, Volker. “Was kommt hier auf das “selbst Sehen” an?: Zum Widerstreit des Antiquarischen und des Ästhetischen bei Lessing.” In Verklärung mit Vorbehalt: Aufsätze und Vorträge zur literarischen Antikerezeption, edited by Volker Riedel, 69–73, 260–62. Jenaer Studien 8. Jena: Bussert und Stadeler, 2015.
- Robert, Jörg. “‘Rettung des Virgils’: Nachahmungspoetik und Paragone in Lessings ‘Laokoon.’” In Robert and Vollhardt, Unordentliche Collectanea, 201–15.
- Wolkenhauer, Anja. “Laokoon vor Lessing: Anmerkungen zur Geschichte des Laokoonstoffes und seiner Präsenz in Lessings ‘Laokoon.’” In Robert and Vollhardt, Unordentliche Collectanea, 153–73.

Gesztelyi argues that a relief in the Sebasteion in Aphrodisias may, when it is considered in relation to adjacent reliefs, be linked with Vergil’s description of Venus’s delivery of arms to Aeneas in Aen. 8. Gómez Pallarès discusses references to Vergil in postclassical Roman mosaic pavements.
