

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 2024—2025

Author(s): Shirley Werner

Source: Vergilius (1959-), 2025, Vol. 71 (2025), pp. 95-126

Published by: The Vergilian Society

Stable URL: <https://www.jstor.org/stable/10.2307/27480486>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <https://about.jstor.org/terms>

JSTOR

The Vergilian Society is collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Vergilius (1959-)

VERGILIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY 2024–2025

Shirley Werner

This 2024–2025 compilation is indebted to the resources of the William R. Perkins Library, Duke University; to those of L'Année philologique; and to the further bibliographies mentioned below. As is my usual practice, I have included older items if they were previously overlooked.

FURTHER BIBLIOGRAPHY

L'Année philologique: Bibliographie critique et analytique de l'antiquité gréco-latine. 2024. Vol. 95. Turnhout. [In “Première partie: auteurs et textes,” see, besides P. Vergilius Maro: Aetna, Catalepton, Centones, Ciris, Claudius Donatus, Copa, Culex, Dirae, Donatus Grammaticus, Lydia, Moretum, Proba, Seruius, Vergiliana Appendix, Vitae Vergilii. The online version of this bibliography, available through Brepols to subscribers, is updated quarterly and includes items published up through the previous calendar year.]

Gnomon: Kritische Zeitschrift für die gesamte klassische Altertumswissenschaft. 2025. Vol. 97. München. [Contains a “Bibliographische Beilage.” The bibliography is freely available online at <https://www.gbd.digital/gbd/>.]

International Bibliography of Humanism and the Renaissance. Turnhout. [The International Bibliography of Humanism and the Renaissance (IBHR) is published online by Brepols. Records from the IBHR, the International Medieval Bibliography, and the Bibliographie de civilisation médiévale are accessible in one search through subscribing institutions.]

Medioevo Latino: Bollettino bibliografico della cultura europea da Boezio a Erasmo (secoli VI–XV). Firenze. [Searchable online through subscription to Mirabile: Archivio digitale della cultura medievale/Digital Archives for Medieval Culture (mirabileweb.it).]

Werner, Shirley. 2024. “Vergilian Bibliography 2023–2024.” Vergilius 70: 131–54.

Vergilius 71 (2025) 95–125

COMPANIONS, COLLECTIONS, AND GENERAL STUDIES

- Augoustakis, Antony, Stavros Frangoulidis, and Thea S. Thorsen, eds. 2025. Classical Enrichment: Greek and Latin Literature and Its Reception. Berlin.
- Davis, Gregson, and Sergio Yona, eds. 2024. Afterlives of the Garden: Receptions of Epicurean Thought in the Early Empire and Late Antiquity. Berlin.
- Grawehr, Matthias, and Markus Kersten, eds. 2024. A Second Gaze: Intertextuality and Transient Meaning in Roman Texts and Objects. Created World 1. Heidelberg.
- Hardie, Philip. 2025. "Virgil and the Roman Republic: Continuity and Rupture." In Augoustakis, Frangoulidis, and Thorsen, 145–60.
- Knox, Ronald. 2023. Ronald Knox's Lectures on Virgil's Aeneid: With Introduction and Critical Essays, edited by Francesca Bugliani Knox. Bloomsbury Classical Studies Monographs. London.
- Labate, Mario, and Gianpiero Rosati, eds. 2013. La costruzione del mito augusteo. Bibliothek der Klassischen Altertumswissenschaften N.S. 2/141. Heidelberg.
- Matzner, Sebastian, and Gail Trimble, eds. 2020. Metalepsis: Ancient Texts, New Perspectives. Classics in Theory. Oxford.
- Nicholas, Lucy. 2020. "Amid the Tears We Sing': Virgil and Humanity." PVS 30: 101–21.
- Notter, Catherine, and Maud Pfaff-Reydellet, eds. 2021. "Segetis certa fides meae": Hommages offerts à Gérard Freyburger. Recherches sur les Rhéoriques Religieuses 31. Turnhout.
- Star, Christopher. 2025. "Vergil and Early Human History." In Archaeologies, Origins, Antiquities: Narrating Early Cultural History in Ancient Greece and Rome, edited by Nicoletta Bruno, 179–98. Beiträge zur Altertumskunde 421. Berlin.

Hardie discusses the Vergilian construction of images of continuity and rupture between republic and principate, with reference to passages of the Eclogues and Georgics and through detailed examination of three responses in the Aeneid to the Ennian chariot race simile (Ann. 77–83 Sk.). Knox's hitherto unpublished lectures on the Aeneid were delivered at Trinity College, Oxford, as part of a lecture course on Vergil in 1912. Matzner and Trimble's collection contains nine chapters treating various occurrences of the device of metalepsis in ancient texts, a figure of speech defined by Gérard Genette (1930–2018) as a blurring of the boundary between the fictional world of the text and the reality of the author, or, differently put, the transgression of the narrative frame separating the fictional world from the real world. Nicholas explores five great abstractions accommodated by Vergil's verse: (1) rootedness and movement, (2) cycle of life, (3) bittersweetness, (4) human connections, and (5) human limitation.

TRANSLATIONS

- Bonmatí, Luis T. 2023. Eneida/Publio Virgilio Marón, ilustraciones de Federico del Barrio, trad. en verso de Luis T. Bonmatí. Literatura Reino de Cordelia 182. Madrid.
- Cairolli, Fábio Paifer. 2024. "Ludicra rhythmata: Experimentos com rima na tradução de poetas latinos." Rónai 12: 54–74.
- Cristóbal López, Vicente. 2024. Eneas por los infiernos (libro VI de la Eneida). Poesía Hiperión. Madrid.
- Fo, Alessandro. 2023. "Lingua poetica e traduzione: Qualche problema da Catullo e Virgilio." Paideia 78: 671–86.
- Hadbawnik, David. 2023. Aeneid, translated by David Hadbawnik, with an introd. by Chris Piuma and an afterword by Dale Martin Smith. Swindon.
- Río Torres-Murciano, Antonio. 2024. "¿Traducciones fieles en verso? El caso de los Virgilio mexicanos." Nova Tellus 42: 111–33.
- Tanfield, Christopher. 2025. A Companion to the Aeneid in Translation. 3 vols. London.
- Weiner, Jesse. 2024. "The Master's Tools? Towards a Politics of Reception." In Classical Reception: New Challenges in a Changing World, edited by Anastasia Bakogianni and Luis Unceta Gómez, 23–39. Trends in Classics. Pathways of Reception 9. Berlin.

Bonmatí reproduces the Latin text of R. A. B. Mynors with a facing translation into Spanish, along with a prologue and notes. Cairolli presents poetic translations into Portuguese, with brief commentary, of passages from Vergil (Aen. 11.648–69), Horace (Ep. 4 and Carm. 1.37), Phaedrus (3.1), and Martial (1.2). The main aesthetic concern was to adapt the Latin original to rhyme, a stylistic resource fundamental to Portuguese versification. Cristóbal López offers a Latin text of Aen. 6 with a facing translation into Spanish hexameters. Fo critiques various solutions adopted by Alfonso Traina in his translations of complex concepts such as fides and pius/pietas in Catullus (Carm. 76), Horace (Carm. 2.14.2; 4.7.14–16 and 23–24), and Vergil. Hadbawnik's translation of the Aeneid previously appeared in two illustrated volumes, and is here offered in one volume in a more affordable edition. Río Torres-Murciano offers a comparative overview of the stylistic practices followed by the Mexican translators José Rafael Larrañaga (ca. 1730–1800), Joaquín Arcadio Pagaza (1839–1918), and Rubén Bonifaz Nuño (1923–2013) in their verse translations of Vergil's three major works. Tanfield's three-volume companion to the Aeneid is designed for use by students reading the work in English. The first volume offers a broad introduction to the epic's historical and philosophical background, to Vergil's life and works and his stylistic techniques, and to the epic's reception, along with maps and a general index. The following two volumes present a line-by-line commentary on the poem that can be used with any edition of the Aeneid in English or Latin. Les Quatre premiers livres des Eneydes du tresellegant poete Virgile, traduictz de Latin en prose Françoise (1541) by the French novelist Hélienne de Crenne (1510–1552) translates only the first four books of the Aeneid. In so doing, Weiner observes, Hélienne produced a radical intervention on Vergil's epic. The Aeneid becomes not a celebration of Roman nationalism but instead a protofeminist tale of tragic romance and male perfidy. Weiner argues that there is something subversive in adapting Greek and Latin literature to undermine Western imperialism, racism, misogyny, and classism.

APPENDIX VERGILIANA

- Asztalos, Monika. 2022. "Ciris 250–258 and 340–348: Textual Problems and Poetic Techniques." Symb. Osl. 96: 98–121.
- Bellei, Francesca. 2024. "The Nose at the Crossroads: An Intersectional Reading of the Pseudo-Vergilian Moretum." TAPA 154: 213–50.
- Carmeli, Michele. 2023. "Fili di ragnatela e tessitura poetica: A proposito di Catull. 13, 8." Myrtia 38: 29–41.
- Dion, Jeanne. 2021. "Magie et politique dans le poème 2 du Catalecton/Catalepton: Le pouvoir des mots." In Notter and Pfaff-Reydellet, 67–77.
- Fabre-Serris, Jacqueline. 2013. "Le Culex et la construction du mythe augustéen: Pratiques et enjeux d'un poème faussement adressé à Octave." In Labate and Rosati, 285–302.
- Haley, Shelley P. 2009. "Be Not Afraid of the Dark: Critical Race Theory and Classical Studies." In Prejudice and Christian Beginnings: Investigating Race, Gender, and Ethnicity in Early Christian Studies, edited by Laura Salah Nasrallah and Elisabeth Schüssler Fiorenza, 27–49. Minneapolis.
- Hardy, Maxwell. 2023. "Culex 108: 'Thick Shade' or 'Thronging Goats'?" Myrtia 38: 317–22.
- Kayachev, Boris. 2023. Lydia, a Poem from the Appendix Vergiliana. Oxford.

- Lassandro, Domenico. 2024. “L’Aetna, un poemetto ‘scientifico.’” In Gli antichi e il cosmo, edited by Vincenzo Lomiento and Giuseppe Solaro, 19–27. Bari.
- Olszaniec, Włodzimierz. 2022. “A Corruption in Ciris 530?” Arctos 56: 65–68.
- . 2023a. “Ciris 524: An Observation.” Euphrosyne: 51: 421–22.
- . 2023b. “Two Suggestions in the Ciris.” Phoenix 77: 157–61.
- . 2023c. “Una nota ad Airone (Ciris) 15: Quattuor antiquis heredibus est data consors.” Hermes 151: 127–28.
- . 2024. “An Echo of Cinna in Ciris 69?” Myrtia 39: 237–39.
- Piergiacomini, Enrico. 2024. “Volcanos and Roman Epicureanism: Traces of Epicurean Theory in the Poet of the Aetna.” In Davis and Yona, 97–112.
- Winters, Nicholas. 2024. “The Epicurean Project of the Ciris.” In Davis and Yona, 79–96.

Bellei offers a new interpretation of the Moretum as erotic satire, turning to recent Black feminist scholarship on pornography to argue that the presence of sex does not automatically negate the agency of Scybale, the African woman described in the poem as Simulus’s custos. Carmeli suggests that at Catullus 13.8, plenus sacculus ... araneorum is probably to be understood in a metaliterary sense, as evidenced by the reuse of the same metaphor in the Culex. In the light of literary evidence from the first centuries BCE and CE, Haley contends that it is plausible that the Romans were aware of skin-color differences and that these played a role, among other factors, in the social construction of difference. The Romans in Augustus’s day were more keenly aware of different cultural practices (especially those of African societies) than we have given them credit for, as the Aeneid and the Moretum illustrate. Hardy questions whether the adjective densas at Culex 108 qualifies pecudes or umbras and evaluates the options. Kayachev provides an introduction, Latin text, translation into English, and commentary to Lydia. Olszaniec (2023b) offers textual notes on Ciris 534–535.

ECLOGUES: GENERAL

- Fitzgerald, William. 2016. “Resonance: The Sonic Environment of Vergil’s Eclogues.” Dictynna 13: n.p.
- Goh, Ian. 2023. “Food for Thought: Eating in Virgil’s Eclogues.” PVS 31: 121–34.

Goh observes that the Eclogues show a curious opposition between the conditions of animals and their guardians: the former seem always to be eating, while the latter hardly ever are.

ECLOGUES: INDIVIDUAL POEMS

- Asaro, Aylén E. 2023. “Sileno en la Égloga 6 de Virgilio: Una captura en clave bucólica.” Argos 50: n.p.
- Berti, Emanuele. 2024. “Quis fuit alter? Arato nella terza Ecloga di Virgilio.” Aevum Antiquum 24: 233–62.
- Bocchi, Giuseppe. 2024. “L’orfismo dissimulato: Ipotesi sulla vittoria di Coridone in Verg. Ecl. 7.” Aevum Antiquum 24: 263–94.
- Dettoni, Giacomo. 2024. “Amat bonus otia Daphnis (Verg. Ecl. V 61): L’ideale della concordia nella Ecloga V.” Erga-Logoi 12: 87–117.
- Egan, Rory. 2020. “Fun with Phyllis and Iollas: The Game of the Name in Eclogue 3.” PVS 30: 77–100.
- Merrill, Rodney. 2014. “The Education of a Prince: Vatic Satire in Horace’s Epode 16 and Virgil’s Eclogue 4.” Revista Letras (Curitiba) 89: 233–65.
- Sherry, Matthew W. 2024. “Corydon’s incondita carmina in Eclogue 2.” CPhil. 119: 528–45.

Berti explains how allusions to the figure of Aratus and to his poem are useful in defining the genre, poetics, and structure of the Eclogues. Egan’s reading of Ecl. 3.76–79, informed by two early readers of the poem (Horace, Serm. 1.44–45; and Ovid, Trist. 2.1.533–38), leads to a reinterpretation that deviates from conventional modern readings. Merrill makes a case for reading Ecl. 4 not as a prediction of the advent of a golden age, but as an entertaining satire on such prognostications, intended to educate the reader—especially Augustus—as to how illusory they are. The resemblances between Ecl. 4 and Horace, Epod. 16 (which Merrill also reads as satirical) arguably bolster this reading. In Ecl. 2, Sherry suggests, Vergil takes advantage of the lexical range of condo, a verb denoting poetic composition and preservation, and uses inconditus to mark Corydon as displaced both physically (country vs. city) and generically (bucolic vs. elegy).

GEORGICS: GENERAL

- Bisignano, Julia Alejandra. 2024. “La mitologización de Augusto en las Geórgicas de Virgilio.” Fortunatae 39: 23–38.
- Trevizam, Matheus. 2022. “Tipologias literárias e exposição técnica em Virgílio e Paládio.” Phaos 22: n.p.

Trevizam makes a lexical comparison of passages that refer to agricultural implements and to the location of beehives from two types of expository texts: Palladius's Opus agriculturae, a technical treatise; and Vergil's Georgics, a work of didactic poetry. The results point to the prevalence of the function of docere in Palladius and of delectare in Vergil.

GEORGICS: INDIVIDUAL BOOKS

- Breed, Brian W. 2024. "Deserta regna: The Georgics and Empty Space." CPhil. 119: 354–75.
- Freer, Nicholas. 2023. "Philodemus, Parthenius, and Virgil, Georgics 1.436–7." PVS 31: 135–46.
- Gagliardi, Paola. 2022. "The laudes Galli at the End of Virgil's Georgics: An Endless Debate." Eranos 113: 61–88.
- Muniz, Liebert de Abreu. 2022. "Geórgicas 2.490–542 e a paradoxal agricultura." Phaos 22: n.p.

Breed offers a geocritical analysis of the plague landscape and related spaces in G. 3 to illuminate the generic trajectories of Vergil's poem. G. 1.436–37, Freer writes, is modeled on a verse by Parthenius of Nicaea (fr. 36 Lightfoot). A likely further allusion is to an epigram by Philodemus, AP 6.349 (= 19 Gow-Page = 34 Sider). This allusion may have an Epicurean resonance.

AENEID: GENERAL

- Barchiesi, Alessandro. 2025. "Aeneas, the Penates, and Italian Nationalism." In Augoustakis, Frangoulidis, and Thorsen, 161–72.
- Farrell, Joseph. 2023. "Vergil's Aethiopians." Maia 75: 386–97.
- Marcolongo, Andrea. 2020. La lezione di Enea. I Robinson/Lecture. Roma.
- Mattern, T. 2024. "Aineias in Arkadien." In Navigating the Worlds of History: Studies in Honor of Robert Rollinger on the Occasion of His 60th Birthday, edited by Kai Ruffing, Brigitte Truschnegg, Andreas Rudigier et al., 269–85. Wiesbaden.
- Pearcy, Lee T. 2024. "Time, Texts, and Fate in the Aeneid." Vergilius 70: 53–72.
- Suerbaum, Werner. 2023. "Nicht gewährte Ehrenpreise, verhängnisvolle Beutestücke." WJA 47: 103–37.
- Uden, James. 2025. "Sacred Time: Grief and Its Limits in the Aeneid." CPhil. 120: 307–26.

Farrell notices that in the Aeneid, the Ethiopians are mentioned only once (4.481), but the population returns in other contexts where they are recognizable both intertextually—through the model of the Iliad, the Odyssey, and some passages of Callimachus—and ethnographically. These references make the presence of Ethiopians at the Carthaginian court plausible. Marcolongo meditates on the lessons of rebuilding, recovery, and renewal that can be learned from Vergil's portrait of Aeneas as a model of resilience. The Italian original has been translated into Portuguese (A lição de Eneias, trans. Miguel Serras Pereira, Coimbra, 2020), Spanish (El arte de resistir: Lo que la Eneida nos enseña sobre cómo superar una crisis, trans. Juan Rabasseda Gascón and Teófilo de Lozoya, Barcelona, 2023) and English (Starting from Scratch: The Life-Changing Lessons of Aeneas, trans. Will Schutt, New York, 2022). Percy has noticed that on several occasions in the Aeneid fate is imagined as a text. Divinities or divinely inspired beings can read it, but human attempts to do so fail because our sequential ordering of past, present, and future is inadequate for understanding the folds and disruptions in linear time that knowledge of fate implies. Suerbaum notes that in the Aeneid it is not so much winning as possessing captured armor (spolia) that is problematic: in many cases, donning the armor has disastrous consequences for both Trojan and Italian heroes.

AENEID: INDIVIDUAL BOOKS I–VI

- Ameduri, Alessio. 2024. "L'eruzione dell'Etna in Virgilio (Aen. 3, 570–84): Una catastrofe 'da manuale.'" In Locus horridus: Ansie romane verso il mondo naturale, edited by Maddalena Bassani and Ria Berg, 37–47. Acta Instituti Romani Finlandiae 52. Roma.
- Casali, Sergio. 2025. "Dido's First Curse (A. 4.380–387)." In Augoustakis, Frangoulidis, and Thorsen, 173–98.
- Cimino, Anna Maria. 2023. "Il vecchio muore e il nuovo non può nascere: Paternità, eredità e transizione nel quinto libro dell'Eneide." Dictynna 20: n.p.
- Conte, Gian Biagio. 2023. "Verifica di un pregiudizio scettico: Riflessioni vecchie e nuove sull'episodio di Elena in Eneide II." Philol. 167: 49–64.
- Cotrozzi, Annamaria. 2023. Eneide, libro IV / Virgilio: Introd. e commento Annamaria Cotrozzi. Commenti a Testi Latini e Greci per l'Insegnamento Universitario 6. Pisa.
- Martínez Astorino, Pablo. 2023. "The Gates of Sleep in Aeneid 6: Falseness, Poetry, and History." Rh. Mus. 166: 247–69.

- Rebeggiani, Stefano. 2013. "Words of Marble: Virgil's Temple of Juno in Aeneid 2 and the Construction of the Augustan Myth." In Labate and Rosati, 149–68.
- . 2023. "Crossing the Hellespont: The Thracian Episode of Polydorus in Virgil's Aeneid." Maia 75: 358–71.
- Starnone, Viola. 2020. "The Dress of Venus in Aeneid 1.314–417." PVS 30: 49–60.
- Vuković, Krešimir. 2024. "River, Giant and Hubris: A Note on Virgil, Aeneid 8.330–2." CQ 74: 150–58.
- Ziosi, Antonio. 2023. "Unreal Cities: Troy Is Not Troy and Carthage Is Destroyed." Maia 75: 339–57.

Vuković notes that Vergil has Evander trace the origins of the name of the River Tiber back to the death of a giant called Thybris (Aen. 8.330–332). The reference to the violent (asper, 330) giant can be understood as etymological wordplay on the Greek word ὕβρις and as a potential allusion to the grammatical debate on the nature of aspiration. Varro's De gente populi Romani is identified as a source for the characterization of the Tiber as a giant in primeval times. Ziosi remarks that the flame imagery in Aen. 2 and 4, through intertextual references particularly to Euripides's tragedies relating to the Trojan cycle, allows us to see the fall of Troy as foreshadowing in myth the destruction of Carthage.

AENEID: INDIVIDUAL BOOKS VII–XII

- Berno, Francesca Romana. 2023. "Poetry and the King: Evander and Carmentis (Verg. Aen. VIII 333–341)." Maia 75: 409–22.
- Canobbio, Alberto. 2023. "Virgilio, Aen. IX 412 sg.: Un locus insolubilis?" Res Publica Litterarum 1: 106–21.
- Delvigo, Maria Luisa. 2023. "Il passato di Evandro: Colpa, punizione, esilio da Gallo a Ovidio." Maia 75: 398–408.
- Ganiban, Randall T. 2021. Aeneid: Book 7. Focus Vergil Aeneid Commentaries. Indianapolis.
- Loar, Matthew P. 2024. "An Allusion to the Blinding of Appius Claudius Caecus in Aeneid Book 8?" CQ 74: 343–46.

At Aen. 9.411–13, Canobbio posits, tergum does not mean "shield," but "back," in line with other passages that specify the part of the body struck.

CHARACTERS

- Dardenay, Alexandra. 2013. “Les héros fondateurs de Rome, entre texte et image à l’époque romaine.” Pallas 93: 165–84.
- Gagliardi, Paola. 2023a. “Le ironie di Enea (Aen. 10.510–605 e 769–908; 12.887–952).” Euphrosyne 51: 33–47.
- . 2023b. “Immolare in Virgilio.” Myrtia 38: 42–60.
- Gallego Cebollada, Eduardo A. 2024. Corpus animusque: Aproximación al retrato en la poesía latina (Virgilio, Horacio, Ovidio). Humanidades 200. Zaragoza.
- Giusti, Elena. 2023. “Rac(ializ)ing Dido.” PVS 31: 53–85.
- Morgan, Llewelyn. 2020. “Who Are the Victims of Aeneas’ Human Sacrifice?” PVS 30: 43–47.
- Schmitz, Christine. 2024. “Vergils Aeneas: Ein mehrdimensionaler Held.” In Minerva am Theaterwall: Vorträge am Alten Gymnasium Oldenburg. 2, Philosophie und Literatur, edited by Matthias Hengelbrock, 177–201. Oldenburg.
- Skoutelas, Charissa, and Anthony Smith. 2025. “Out with the Old, In with the Young? Youth and Old Age in Vergil’s Eclogues and Georgics.” NECJ 52: 31–48.
- Tortorella, Claudia. 2024. “The Two Female duces in the Aeneid: The [sic] Comparing the Figures of Camilla and Dido through an Analysis of the Common Adjectives Used to Describe Them.” SPhV 26: 61–76.
- Van Geel, Lien. 2024. “Minor Characters, Major Shifts: The Cases of Pholoe, the Cretan Slave (Aen. 5.281–5), and Cretheus, the Bard (Aen. 9.774–7).” NECJ 51: 64–75.

Dardenay considers the question of the extent to which the Aeneid might have influenced the iconographic representation of Rome’s founding heroes. Gagliardi (2023a) notes that in his duels after the death of Pallas, Aeneas often addresses his dying or dead adversaries with cruel words, in contrast to their appeals to his pietas. Sometimes the dying enemies respond to his sarcasm in a noble way that underscores their emotional superiority. Gagliardi (2023b) notes that the verb immolare appears only three times in Vergil’s entire work, all in the Aeneid and always referring to the human sacrifices Aeneas makes in his anger at the death of Pallas in 10.519 and 10.541 and in the murder of Turnus at the end of the poem (12.949). Morgan brings out the further implications of these passages: when Aeneas sacrifices the sons of Ufens at Aen. 10.515–20, Vergil deploys a name expressive of Roman citizenship itself. Ufens evokes the tribus Oufentina, established in 318 BCE as one of the thirty-five voting tribes of Rome. Not only is Aeneas indulging in barbaric ritual practice, but in the process the founder of Rome is apparently attacking the very fabric of Rome. The implication in immolat (Aen. 12.949), Aeneas's word when he says that his slaying of Turnus is a sacrifice, introduces a comparable disquiet. Gallego Cebollada's book studies the various stylistic ways in which Vergil, Horace, and Ovid create portraits of their characters. Giusti argues that Dido in the Aeneid is both the victim of the Romans' racializing of Phoenicians and Carthaginians, and herself an actor of the Phoenicians' racializing of autochthonous people in North Africa. Skoutelas and Smith observe that in Ecl. 6 and G. 4—two poems in which youths bind an old figure with chains to compel a song—Vergil mobilizes the clash of youth and senectitude to comment on the effects of literary tradition on his own work. Van Geel discovers significance in Vergil's seemingly rushed treatment of two minor characters when they are considered in light of Vergil's use of Homeric epic in the intertext-heavy books 5 and 9. These characters function as Vergil's illustrations of Aeneas's movement away from the Homeric world, as the text progresses toward the proto-Roman project that features prominently in the Aeneid's narrative.

PHILOSOPHY AND RELIGION

- Feeney, Denis. 2023. "Interpreting Sacrificial Ritual in Roman Poetry: Disciplines and Their Models." In The Religious History of the Roman Empire: The Republican Centuries, edited by J. A. North, 234–60. Oxford Readings in Classical Studies. Oxford.
- Hedrick, Robert. 2024. "Evidence and Anger: Epicurean Cognition in the Finale of the Aeneid." In Davis and Yona, 35–54.
- McOsker, Michael, and Lee Fratantuono. 2024. "Teaching Vergil to Write: Vergil's Aesthetics and the Influence of Philodemus and Parthenius." BICS 67: 71–85.
- Stöckinger, Martin. 2013. "Inalienable Possessions: The Di Penates in the Aeneid and in Augustan Culture." In Labate and Rosati, 129–48.
- Teske, Michael. 2024. "Vergil's Bougonia Rite: Its Nature, Sources, and Possible Link to the Indo-European Myth of Creation." In Sublime Cosmos in Graeco-Roman Literature and Its Reception: Intersections of Myth, Science and History, edited by David Christenson and Cynthia White, 89–104. London.

HISTORY, MATERIAL CULTURE, AND LANDSCAPE

- Boldrighini, Francesca. 2023. "Aeneas on the Palatine Hill: Some New Reflections about the Decoration of the So-called Lupercal." Maia 75: 265–77.
- Cugusi, Paolo. 2021. "Carmina Latina Epigraphica e il testo delle opere di Virgilio." In Notter and Pfaff-Reydellet, 167–78.
- D'Alessio, Maria Teresa, and Francesco De Stefano. 2023. "Landscape in Ancient Coastal Latium." Maia 75: 297–323.
- Giusti, Elena. 2016. "Did Somebody Say Augustan Totalitarianism? Duncan Kennedy's 'Reflections,' Hannah Arendt's Origins, and the Continental Divide over Virgil's Aeneid." Dictynna 13: n.p.
- Gregori, Gian Luca. 2023. "Riferimenti geografici e propaganda nell'Eneide: Una nota su Virgilio, Augusto e le iscrizioni." Maia 75: 372–85.
- Livorsi, Lorenzo. 2024. "Nec vana fides: The Intertextual Background of a Law of Valentinian III (Nov. Val. 23) and the Date of the Versus ad gratiam Domini." CQ 74: 748–62.
- Maticic, Del A. 2022. "Hercules, Cacus, and the Poetics of Drains in Aeneid 8 and Propertius 4.9." In The Impact of the Roman Empire on Landscapes: Proceedings of the Fourteenth Workshop of the International Network Impact of Empire (Mainz, June 12–15, 2019), edited by Marietta Horster and Nikolas Häckler, 339–52. Impact of Empire 14. Leiden.
- Mota, Thiago Eustáquio Araújo. 2023. "De Cumas ao Palatino: O deus Apolo como vetor de intersecção temporal na éfrase virgiliana." Phoënix 29: 88–106.
- Valencia Constantino, Genaro. 2024. "Fui alcázar de moros ... pero me rescató el Rey Alfonso: ¿Un eco virgiliano en un epígrafe de Cáceres?" Talia Dixit 19: 255–63.

The Lupercal on the Palatine, which Evander shows Aeneas at Aen. 8.337–48, was recently identified with a construction found through geophysical inspection in 2007. The documentation, however, leads Boldrighini to conclude that this structure should rather be identified as a first-century-BCE nymphaeum, whose decorations are similar to those of other underground structures located in Lazio and Campania. An analysis of historical and archaeological data from the sixth to the second century BCE relating to the legend of Aeneas and his landing on coastal Latium leads D'Alessio and De Stefano to point to two defining periods: an older, mythic period, and a period coinciding with the Roman expansionist policy that preceded the renewed interest in Aeneas in the Vergilian age. Giusti takes up again the supposedly outdated debate about the pro- or anti-

Augustan stance of Augustan texts, which Duncan Kennedy's reflections on these points managed to cast in a different light: "‘Augustan’ and ‘Anti-Augustan’: Reflections on Terms of Reference," in A. Powell, ed., Roman Poetry and Propaganda in the Age of Augustus (1992). Since then, the dichotomy seems useless in a dialectic that must always consider Augustus as a point of reference. Yet scholarship remains divided in its interpretation of Augustus's reign and its effects on poetry. Kennedy's study offers further reflections on the workings of Augustan ideology than previously assumed. A combined rereading of that essay and Hannah Arendt's writings on the ideological language of totalitarian systems (The Origins of Totalitarianism, 1951) opens up new possibilities for interpreting Augustan rule and anti-Augustanism in Augustan texts. Gregori observes that the prophecies, names of peoples, and military actions evoked in the Aeneid are not entirely conventional but are intended to recall historical events chronologically close and referable to Augustan Rome. This argument is confirmable through the evidence of Latin inscriptions and, in particular, through Augustus's Res gestae 25–33. Livorsi picks out a complex web of intertextual references ultimately dependent on Vergil, beginning with the observation that late antique laws are often rhetorically bolstered by expressions of popularized philosophy and theology. In a constitution of Valentinian III against tomb violators (Nouell. Valent. 23), the phrase nec uana fides, which features in the preamble of this law, seems merely an ornamental allusion to Aen. 4.12. The passage in the law might, however, be a reminiscence of Prudentius, Cath. 3.196, who had used the same Vergilian tag to allude to Paul (1 Cor 15:13–17), thus expressing faith in the doctrine of resurrection. The author of the Vergilian cento Versus ad gratiam Domini also redeployed the phrase nec uana fides with reference to the immortality of the soul, and the cento's intertextual relationship with Prudentius may contribute to the evidence about its date. This net of intertextual references (Vergil, Paul, Prudentius) bestows authority on the legal admonition and justifies an appreciation of the constitutions as literature. Maticic finds a connection between Hercules's drainage of landscapes and drying up of bodies and the evocation of hydraulic works and water consumption in Rome in the Augustan period. Mota observes that Vergil's descriptions of the sanctuaries of Apollo at Cumae and on the Palatine, found respectively in Aen. 6 and 8, can be understood as links of temporal intersection between the heroic past and the new configurations of the cult of Apollo as well as the urban interventions carried out by Octavian. Valencia Constantino finds possible echos of a Vergilian verse (Aen. 1.12) and an allusion to his epitaph (Mantua me genuit) in a four-line inscription, now recognized as elegiac couplets, carved on a door lintel in Cáceres, Spain, sometime after the twelfth century.

STYLE, LANGUAGE, AND METER

- Beck, Deborah. 2023. The Stories of Similes in Greek and Roman Epic. Cambridge, UK.
- Ceccarelli, Lucio. 2023. “Metro e stile in Virgilio: I dialoghi.” Paideia 78: 485–510.
- García Domingo, Enrique. 2023. “Nota sobre Thymber/Thymbre (Verg. Aen. 10.391, 394).” Cuadernos de Filología Clásica: Estudios Griegos e Indoeuropeos No. 33 Especial: 105–9.
- Kennedy, Duncan. 2020. “Metalepsis and Metaphysics.” In Matzner and Trimble, 223–45.
- Kersten, Markus. 2024. “Sinn im Zwischenraum: Über zwei Arten des zweiten Blicks und die Wirkung des Schriftbilds bei Vergil.” In Grawehr and Kersten, 417–40.
- Lovatt, Helen. 2020. “Metalepsis, Grief, and Narrative in Aeneid 2.” In Matzner and Trimble, 167–93.
- Silva, Gabriel A. F. 2024. “An Unnoticed Telestich in Virgil, Aeneid 8.246–9?” CQ 74: 346–49.
- Tamás, Ábel. 2024. “Maius opus moveo: Vergil’s Hidden Signature in Aeneid 7.45?” CPhil. 119: 429–34.
- Torzi, Ilaria. 2024. “Strategie di cortesia e deferenza in Aen. 11.100–130.” Athenaeum 112: 391–419.

Beck’s book gives an account of the “simile world” created across Greek and Latin epic poetry over the centuries, including discussion of Homer, Apollonius Rhodius, Vergil, and Ovid. García Domingo discusses Vergil’s linguistic variations and innovations of personal names based on the forms Thy(m)b- and Θύ(μ)βρ-. Kennedy discusses the function of metalepsis in the work of Plato, Vergil, and other ancient texts. Silva discovers a telestich in Aen. 8.246–49 that presents the Greek word σημα (“portent, wonder, tomb”). The word is significant from its context (the battle between Hercules and Cacus), with the insistence in the Latin poetic tradition on the imagery of light and revelation and the use of the phrase mirabile dictu (8.252), which appears in the same episode. Tamás finds the hidden signature Ma(ro)–Pu(blius)–Ve(rgilius) in Vergil’s vatic announcement maius opus moueo at Aen. 7.45.

VERGIL AND AUGUSTAN WRITERS

- Fabre-Serris, Jacqueline. 2025. "Iambic Parody in Horace's Epode 11: A Variation on Vergil's Generic Games in Eclogue 10?" In Augoustakis, Frangoulidis, and Thorsen, 127–44.
- Holzberg, Niklas. 2020. "From deus absconditus to Σωτήρ: Octavian in Virgil and Early Augustan Poetry." PVS 30: 27–42.
- O'Rourke, Donncha. 2025. Propertius and the Virgilian Sensibility: Elegy after 19 BC. Cambridge, UK.
- Paschalis, Michael. 2024. "Horatian recusatio in the Shadow of Virgil." In Grawehr and Kersten, 389–415.
- Putnam, Michael C. J. 2023. "Horace C. 3.27 and Virgil, Aeneid 9." NECJ 50: 1–8.
- Santos, Gilson José. 2022. "A enfermidade das abelhas em Columela e em Virgílio." Phaos 22: n.p.

Holzberg observes that Vergil, Horace, Tibullus, and Propertius display conspicuous restraint when talking about or even alluding to Octavian in their poetry written in the thirties and twenties of the first century BCE. Octavian seems to be featured in early Augustan poetry as deus absconditus and only later, in poems composed after the Aeneid, expressly revered as Σωτήρ. Evidence that supports this is offered from texts that predate the Aeneid, including Vergil, Ecl. 4 and 8; Horace, Serm. 1.5; Tibullus 1.7, and others. O'Rourke considers Propertius's final collection of elegies as the earliest concerted response to the poetic career of Vergil in its totality. The analysis reveals an elegiac Vergil as much as it does an epicizing Propertius. Putnam focuses on the multivalent appearances of the concept of pietas in Horace and Vergil. Santos discusses passages from the Georgics and from Columella, Res rustica 9 which refer to the illness and death of bees.

ANCIENT AUTHORS AFTER VERGIL

(For the Vergilian Centones, see the next heading)

- Berno, Francesca Romana. 2024. "Seneca's Aeneid: A Stoic Reading of Virgil?" CQ 74: 646–60.
- Boureau, Alain. 2012. "Une dette sans fin: Le vœu, source romaine de conduites chrétiennes dans l'antiquité tardive." Pallas 88: 197–204.
- Celotto, Giulio. 2024. "Bad and Good Teachers in Persius' Satires: A Divided Allusion to Vergil Georgics 1." Phoenix 78: 215–24.

- Erskine, Fletcher. 2024. "Meliboeus Is Dead, Long Live Meliboeus: Confronting the Spectre of Crisis in Nemesianus' Eclogue 1." CQ 74: 708–25.
- Falkemback Ribeiro, Daniel. 2024. "Carving More Trees: Memory and Environment in Virgil and Calpurnius Siculus." In Grawehr and Kersten, 369–88.
- Hardie, Philip. 2017. "How Prudentian Is the Aeneid?" Dictynna 14: n.p.
- Hudson, Jared. 2023. "Florus orator an poeta? or, To Compare Small Things with Great." Dictynna 20: n.p.
- Kearey, Talitha. 2020. "Secondary Metalepsis? Talking to Virgil in Fulgentius' Expositio Virgilianae continentiae." In Matzner and Trimble, 195–222.
- Ortoleva, Vincenzo. 2023. "‘L’importante è finire’: Ancora a proposito del riuso di Verg. Aen. 4.415 in Auson. Epigr. 75.8 Green." Philol. 167: 144–55.
- Papaioannou, Sophia. 2025. "Studying Ambrose Reading Vergil: Christian Culture Wars in Classical Context." In Early Christian Writers in the West and the Classical Literary Tradition: Stylistic and Literary Perspectives, edited by Sophia Papaioannou and Thomas Tsartsidis, 99–116. Trends in Classics. Supplementary Volumes 177. Berlin.
- Sanderson, Elaine C. 2023. "Illuminating Darkness: Virgilian Ambiguity and Lucan's Underworld." PVS 31: 27–52.
- Scafoglio, Giampiero. 2023. "Triphiodorus and the Aeneid: From Poetics to Ideology." In Later Greek Epic and the Latin Literary Tradition, edited by Katerina Carvounis, Sophia Papaioannou, and Giampiero Scafoglio, 101–22. Trends in Classics. Supplementary Volumes 136. Berlin.
- Spence, Sarah. 2024. "Augustine, Virgil, and the Landscape of Memory." In Textual Communities, Textual Selves: Essays in Dialogue with Brian Stock, edited by Sarah Powrie and Gur Zak, 74–93. Papers in Medieval Studies. Toronto.
- Tanozzi, Federico. 2023. "L'antiduello ovvero Della morte di Priamo." Lexis 41: 423–51.
- Tomcik, Méli ssande. 2024a. "Figuring out Fama: An Intertextual Reading of Valerius Flaccus Argonautica 6.1–30." CPhil. 119: 555–63.
- . 2024b. "Virtue's Claim to Fame (Statius, Thebaid 10.610–80)." CQ 74: 366–69.
- Tommasi, Chiara Ombretta. 2021. "Sull'imitazione vergiliana in Corippo." Κοινωνία 45: 617–19.
- Tzounakas, Spyridon. 2023. "Valerius Flaccus' Argonautica as a Supplement to the Aeneid." PVS 31: 87–120.

Berno's analysis of both the content and the form of Seneca's quotations from Vergil demonstrates that Seneca uses them not only to convey Stoic ideas but also to provide a narrative. He prefers passages focused on a few key concepts: virtue and fighting, god and fate, death. These are main themes both of the Aeneid and of the epistles. The distribution of the themes throughout the collection aims in the beginning at improving one's virtue and then proceeds, toward the end, to an acceptance of death. Boureau observes that in Epist. 127 Augustine adopts the phrase uoti reus from Aen. 5.237 to consolidate the Christian concept of the vow (for the vow of chastity in marriage) by grounding it in the idea of a good debt and rediscovering the republican idea of civic engagement. Celotto notes that Persius engages with G. 1.145–49 via a "divided allusion," evoking this passage at two different moments in his collection (5.37–40 and prol. 10–11) to set up a contrast between body and mind as a bad and good teacher of morals and literature, respectively. Erskine points out that Nemesianus's Eclogues are the last collection of bucolic poems before the sociopolitical shifts of the fourth century CE. Within his reuse of characters, tropes, and narrative structures from Vergil and Calpurnius Siculus, however, resides a consciousness of contemporary issues. The thematic structure of his first Eclogue can be analyzed with a view to his historical context: the eclogue finds recourse not in hoping for a new political golden age but in the consolatory and preservative power of a poetry oriented toward the past. Hardie points to the fact that Prudentius's Psychomachia is an allegorical epic as the feature that marks a decisive break with the tradition of classical epic. Yet this raises the question of the extent to which its allegorical techniques are, in fact, Vergilian. The question then arises as to whether reading Psychomachia with the help of the Aeneid can also provide insights for reading the Aeneid. Against this background, Vergil's use of allegorical techniques can be identified, which can be provocatively described as Prudentian. Hudson considers the literary aims of Vergilius orator an poeta?, the fragmentary dialogue attributed to Florus. Spence argues that at Conf. 5.8.15 Augustine uses our recognition of the affiliation between Conf. 5 and Aen. 4 to start us thinking about Dido, but then he moves us to another section of the Aeneid and rebuilds the landscape of Carthage into the landscape of the underworld. Tanozzi explores the theme of Priam's death: in Aen. 2, in Quintus of Smyrna's Posthomerica, and in Triphiodorus's Ilii excidium, Priam's death at the hands of Neoptolemus follows different narrative patterns, but all the descriptions adopt, and reverse, the model of the duel, so that the Trojan king's death departs from the heroic model. Tomcik (2024a) argues for the influence of Vergil's Fama (Aen. 4.173–97) on the opening scene of Valerius Flaccus's sixth book (6.1–

30) and offers a metapoetic interpretation of the passage by reading Fama not only as a personification of Rumor but also as a representation of the literary tradition. Tomcik (2024b) finds that Fama is also a model for the appearance of Virtus at the outset of Menoeceus's sacrifice in Statius, Th. 10.610–80. In the Argonautica, Tzounakas demonstrates, Valerius treats some episodes in a way that could be interpreted as a commentary on relevant passages of the Aeneid. Particular focus is paid to passages that are presented as prequels to the Aeneid. This strategy allows Valerius to safeguard his originality and at the same time it reinforces his suggestion (with metaliterary implications) that the Argo is the first ship.

VERGILIAN CENTONES

- Aragione, Gabriella, and Agnès Molinier-Arbo. 2020. "Un diner sur l'herbe: Proba et le pouvoir évocateur de la poésie." In Poetry, Bible and Theology from Late Antiquity to the Middle Ages, edited by Michele Cutino, 309–20. Millennium-Studien 86. Berlin.
- Bretzigheimer, Gerlinde. 2023. "Geborgtes Lob: Die Praefatio des Cento nuptialis von Decimus Magnus Ausonius." Rh. Mus. 166: 45–90.
- Buckl, Philipp. 2024. "Das 'ergessen' im Cento Probas am Beispiel des Binnenproömiums (vv. 333–345)." In Römische Rezeptionen der Kaiserzeit und Spätantike: Festschrift für Bardo M. Gauly, edited by Gregor Bitto, Anna Ginestí Rosell, and Jonas Lüdascher, 673–89. Beiträge zur Altertumskunde 412. Berlin.
- Gouvêa Júnior, Márcio Meirelles. 2022. "De panificio, Narcissus e De creatione: Estudo introdutório e proposta de tradução de três exemplares paradigmáticos tardo-antigos dos centões latinos." Phaos 22: n.p.
- Sisul, Ana Clara. 2024. "Sobre tres lýtotes en el centón cristiano Versus ad gratiam Domini." Auster 29: n.p.
- Sowers, Brian. 2022. "Common Texts, (Un)common Aesthetics: The Greek and Latin cento in Dialogue." In Greek and Latin Poetry of Late Antiquity, edited by Berenice Verhelst and Tine Scheijnen, 115–31. Cambridge, UK.
- Watson, Cristalle. 2024a. "A Feminine Typological Trinity in Proba's Cento Vergilianus 380–414." CQ 74: 281–89.
- . 2024b. "A Reconstruction of Proba, Cento Vergilianus 42a–b." CQ 74: 726–31.

Sowers examines late antique Greek and Latin centos from the perspective of the poets who wrote them and the authors who read them, with attention given to Ausonius's preface and epilogue to his Cento nuptialis, Aelia Eudocia's prefatory poem to her Homeric cento, and the proem of Proba's Vergilian cento. It has been recognized, as Watson (2024a) explains, that the compositional strategy used by Proba reflects the exegetical method of typology: by reusing particular Vergilian verses for biblical characters, Proba creates a typological relationship whereby a Vergilian type both prefigures and is fulfilled by a biblical antitype. Her article now proposes an extended model of typology, in which the type not only prefigures the antitype, but also enfigures it, providing the reader with a conceptual paradigm through which to understand a supernatural reality. In the baptism scene (380–414), which serves as a case study, Proba reuses passages that in the Aeneid describe female characters, hinting at a feminine typological Trinity. Watson (2024b) writes that Proba's Cento contains a corruption at line 42, sometimes printed as two half-lines separated by a lacuna. A novel reconstruction can be based upon the six days of the biblical creation, summarized in reverse. Watson presents two possible variants of the reconstruction and evaluates them on textual, metrical, compositional, and contextual grounds.

VERGIL AND EARLIER WRITERS

- Barchiesi, Alessandro. 2024. "Doomscrolling at Segesta: An Allusion to Lycophron in Virgil, Aeneid 5.552–4." In Hellenistic Literature and Culture, edited by Benjamin Acosta-Hughes, Jacqueline Arthur-Montagne, and Phiroze Vasunia, 268–83. New York.
- Boldrer, Francesca. 2023. "Elementi ciceroniani in Virgilio: L'incipit della I Bucolica." Lexis 41: 93–114.
- Casali, Sergio. 2023. "Cato's Origines and Virgil's Aeneid: The War in Latium and the Name of Iulus." Maia 75: 324–38.
- Cowan, Robert. 2023. "Ucalegon and the Gauls: Aeneid 2 and the Hymn to Delos Revisited." HSCP 113: 201–30.
- Fratantuono, Lee. 2023. "Varium et mutabile semper femina: Aristophanes' Shapeshifting Lamia and Virgil's Dido." Myrtia 38: 61–79.
- . 2024a. "Aeneas' Deer-Hunting and the Bees of Carthage: The Influence of Xenophon on Virgil." Graeco-Latina Brunensia 29: 77–91.
- . 2024b. "Vergilius lyricus: The Influence of the Greek Lyric and Elegiac Poets on the Aeneid." Myrtia 39: 89–112.
- Frazel, Thomas D. 2024. "Virgil, Aeneid 6.83–97 and Lycophron, Again." Vergilius 70: 3–32.
- Mac Góráin, Fiachra. 2025. "Turnus Donning Tragedy: The Baldric in Virgil's Aeneid." In Augoustakis, Frangoulidis, and Thorsen, 199–216.

- Musio, Andrea. 2024. “The fil rouge between Cicero and Virgil: An Analysis of Cultural and Semantic Evolution.” ICS 49: 88–113.
- Nelis, Basil L. P. 2024. “Virgil and the Rhesus Attributed to Euripides: An Unnoticed Allusion at Aeneid 1.25–7?” CQ 74: 611–17.
- Robertson, Paul. 2024. “The Size of Vergil’s Cyclops: An Intertextual Study of Vergil, Euripides, and Homer.” Vergilius 70: 33–52.
- Wheeler, Anne Sophie. 2023. “Die Erfindung, Neuerfindung und Wiedererfindung der Bukolik: Das Corpus Theocriteum und Vergils Eklogen.” In Erfinden – Erschaffen – Erdichten, edited by Manuel Baumbach, 291–316. Darmstadt.

Cowan suggests that Vergil’s engagement at Aen. 2.309–17 with Callimachus’s depiction of the sack of Callion by the Gauls in the Hymn to Delos (Del. 178–185) complicates his own depiction of the sack of Troy. Less securely, Vergil’s inclusion of the figure of Ucalegon from Il. 3 may also evoke the οὐκ ἀλέγοντες Phlegyans from the Homeric Hymn to Apollo (Ap. 279), who disturbingly resemble both the Callian and Trojan victims and the Gallic and Greek aggressors. Fratantuono (2023) speculates that the murderous shapeshifting folkloric monsters known from quotations in Aristophanic comedy might have inspired Vergil in his portrayal of Dido’s metamorphosis from a responsible ruler of her people to a furious enemy. Mercury’s misogynistic warning to Aeneas about the mutability of women may also allude to the changing nature of these monsters. The polymath Xenophon is an undervalued source for certain passages in the Aeneid, as Fratantuono (2024a) notes. He is a literary precursor to Vergil’s decisions both to emphasize Aeneas’s hunting skills and to give bees a prominent place in his depiction of the emerging Carthage. Frazel considers the allusions to Lycophron’s Alexandra in the Sybil’s first responsum to Aeneas. Musio observes that there are lines of ideological contact between the revelation of Scipio Africanus to the younger Scipio in the Somnium Scipionis (Rep. 6) and the similar revelation of Anchises to Aeneas in Aen. 6. An interrogation of Cicero’s treatment of the categories of hostis (enemy), peregrinus (stranger), and externus (foreigner) shows how Vergil received these categories and moved beyond them in his portrayals of Aeneas and his companions upon their arrival in Italy in Aen. 7 and beyond. Nelis notices that the narrator’s account of Juno’s anger at the outcome of the judgment of Paris at Aen. 1.25–27 contains an allusion to a prologue transmitted in manuscripts of the Rhesus attributed to Euripides. Aeneas’s tearful reaction at 1.469–73 to seeing an image depicting the fate of Rhesus in Juno’s temple in Carthage gains extra point after the allusion: Aeneas could be perceived as misreading the scene and not understanding that he himself, another victim of Juno's wrath, is in a sense another Rhesus. Robertson notes that Vergil's description of the Cyclops's size encapsulates the previous descriptions of Homer (Od. 9.106, 187, and 190–192) and Euripides (Cyc. 669–671), while innovating to provide physical clarity to his description. Vergil's choice of the word arduus underscores the importance of Euripides as a source and demonstrates how Vergil attempted to reconcile his predecessors.

ANCIENT COMMENTARIES, SCHOLIA, VITAE

- Celotto, Giulio. 2024. "Servius' Use of Persius in His Commentary on Vergil's Aeneid: Uncovering a Rich Intertextual Dialogue." AJPhil. 145: 593–629.
- Danovi, Vittorio Remo. 2023. "The New Tiberius Claudius Donatus and the Temple of Apollo at Cumae: A Textual Note on the Comment on Aen. VI 14–19 Marshall." Maia 75: 550–53.
- Juhász, Daniella. 2022. "A Nisus és Euryalus-epizód (Aeneis IX. 176–449) a kommentárhagyományban [The Nisus and Euryalus Episodes (Aeneid IX. 176–449) in the Commentary Tradition]." In Mathéma I: Ókortudományi és recepciótörténeti tanulmányok [Studies in Antiquity and Its Reception], edited by Anna Emese Kerti and Bernadett Kárpáti, 163–81. Budapest.
- McGill, Scott. 2023. "The Aeneid More or Less: The Verse Argumenta of the So-called 'Twelve Wise Men.'" In Epitomic Writing in Late Antiquity and Beyond: Forms of Unabridged Writing, edited by Paolo Felice Sacchi and Marco Formisano, 233–47. London.
- Squillante Saccone, Marisa. 2020. "Tra retorica e diritto: Le Interpretationes Vergilianae di Tiberio Claudio Donato." Κοινωνία 44: 1489–97.
- Stok, Fabio. 2016–2017. "Schemi di accessus a Virgilio." IFilolClass 16: 229–43.
- . 2021. "Vexasse rates: Una vexata quaestio dell'esegesi virgiliana." In Symbolae Panhormitanae: Scritti filologici in onore di Gianfranco Nuzzo, edited by Carlo Martino Lucarini, Cristiana Melidone, and Salvatore Russo, 505–15. Culture e Società 7. Palermo.
- Tamás, Ábel. 2022. "A szöveg mint illúzió és epifánia: Vergilius 'Helena-epizódja' és a kommentárok [The Text as Illusion and Epiphany: The Helen Episode of Virgil and the Commentaries]." Ókor: Folyóirat az Antik Kultúráról 21: 14–21.
- Tischer, Ute. 2021. "Comparison and Competition: Cicero, Virgil and the Authority of the Interpreter." In Polemics and Networking in Graeco-

Roman Antiquity, edited by Pieter D’Hoine, Geert Roskam, Stefan Schorn, and Joseph Verheyden, 205–31. Lectio 12. Turnhout.

Danovi suggests that the text of Donatus’s comment on Aen. 6.14–19 should probably read dum laudat conditorem or laudato conditore instead of laudat conditor. Squillante Saccone cautions that the presence of legal vocabulary in Donatus’s lexical repertoire does not necessarily imply that he had a background in law. Only a few words belong to a purely technical sphere, and in this material as a whole it is difficult to distinguish between terms of generic postclassical usage and those of purely legal relevance. Stok (2016–2017) provides an account of the use of the introductory outline—the accessus—to Vergil’s work in Servius’s commentary, a form that enjoyed a certain degree of popularity throughout the Middle Ages up to the fourteenth century; Servius, in turn, had drawn on Aelius Donatus’s preface to the Eclogues, which itself drew on forms of Theocritean exegesis, as already attested in Pseudo-Probus. Tamás comments on Donatus’s and Servius’s treatment of the Helen episode in Aen. 2. Tischer discusses comparisons of Vergil’s and Cicero’s works in the commentary of Servius and in Macrobius’s Saturnalia.

MANUSCRIPTS; TEXTUAL TRADITION

- Abbamonte, Giancarlo, and Craig Kallendorf. 2023. “On Indexing: The Birth and Early Development of an Idea.” JHI 84: 465–86.
- Danovi, Vittorio Remo. 2022. “Un codex descriptus (o inutilis) nella tradizione manoscritta degli Scholia Bernensia.” GIF 74: 341–70.
- . 2023a. “Il rapporto stemmatico tra i testimoni continuativi di Tiberio Claudio Donato e il ‘Virgilio di Tours.’” Rh. Mus. 166: 318–20.
- . 2023b. “Was the Commentary on Vergil by Aelius Donatus Extant in the Ninth Century? A Reappraisal.” Philol. 167: 156–71.
- Fratantuono, Lee. 2024. “A Conjecture at Virgil, Aeneid I.574.” Symb. Osl. 98: 14–23.
- Laneri, Maria Teresa. 2024. “Testi di Dante e di Petrarca in un codice virgiliano del secolo XIV individuato di recente: Alghero, Biblioteca Comunale ‘Rafael Sari,’ ms. 58.” Translat Library 6: n.p.
- Mañas Núñez, Manuel. 2024. “Inepti centones a diuinis Aeneidos carminibus exploduntur: Sánchez de las Brozas, crítico textual de la Eneida.” REC 24: 153–77.
- Morales Bernal, Francisco José. 2023. La Eneida en España: Las primeras ediciones impresas (1500–1550). Verbum Ensayo. Madrid.

- Rodríguez-Noriega Guillén, Lucía. 2024. “Erudición griega y romana en Schol. Veron. Aen. 3, 705: Los límites de la atribución de fragmentos.” Ordia Prima 2: n.p.
- Turcan, Robert. 2009. “L’inadéquation de l’image au texte: Sur quelques miniatures du Vergilius Vaticanus 3225 et la chronologie de leur inspiration.” Monuments et mémoires publiés par l’Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, Fondation Eugène Piot 88: 115–49.
- Vespoli, Lorenzo. 2023. “Presenze Sofoclee nel postillato inedito di Angelo Poliziano alle Bucoliche e all’Eneide.” Sileno 49: 255–74.
- Zurli, Lorian. 2023. “In difesa di dederis (Aen. 4, 436).” Myrtia 38: 313–16.

Abbamonte and Kallendorf trace the origins of indexing up to the printed editions of the Italian humanist Lorenzo Valla’s (1407–1457) Elegantie and Niccolò Perotti’s (1429–1480) Cornucopie, as well as early modern editions of Vergil. Danovi (2022) discusses the ninth-century MSS Bern, Burgerbibliothek, 172 and 167, containing the Vergilian commentary known as the Scholia Bernensia. Danovi (2023a) has discovered that at least some of Donatus’s notes in the manuscript Bern, Burgerbibliothek, 165 (= Tu, the so-called Vergil of Tours) seem to be based on the manuscript Città del Vaticano, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, Reg. Lat. 1484 (= R). Since the analogous scholia are not present in the manuscript Città del Vaticano, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, Vat. Lat. 1570 (= Va), it remains unclear whether they were already present in the common archetype of Tu and Va (= τ). The position of R also remains unclear. Danovi (2023b) points out that it is commonly assumed that Donatus’s commentary on Vergil was still available to Carolingian scholars in the ninth century. The proof was seemingly provided by J. J. H. Savage (De scholiis in Turonensi Virgili codice scriptis, 1923, and later writings). An examination of the manuscripts, however, shows that Savage’s position does not stand up to scrutiny and that the terminus post quem for the loss of Donatus’s commentary must be set at least a century earlier. Fratantuono conjectures aletur in place of the transmitted agetur at Aen. 1.574. Laneri discusses the fourteenth-century codex Alghero, Biblioteca Comunale “Rafael Sari,” 58, which contains the Aeneid, other Vergilian material, Dante’s Epistle 7 and Petrarch’s Epistle 2.5; and offers a transcription of two anonymous poems. Mañas Núñez studies the miscellaneous notes by Spanish humanist Francisco Sánchez de las Brozas (1523–1600) found at the end of his commentary on the Eclogues. These aim to demonstrate that the Aeneid contains numerous interpolations: in addition to fifty-eight incomplete, unfinished, or truncated verses, the humanist found at least twenty more verses that, in his opinion, should be expurgated. Morales

Bernal offers a comprehensive philological study of the earliest printed editions of the Aeneid in Spain (1500–1559). The emergence of the printing press not only promoted the expansion of culture in general and classical culture in particular, but also led to the birth of a new type of philology and a new way of approaching Greek and Latin texts. Rodríguez-Noriega Guillén takes as a starting point a poorly transmitted passage at Schol. Veron. Aen. 3.705 for a discussion of the risks posed by the attribution of fragments transmitted by sources with textual difficulties. She then reviews the different proposals regarding the authorship of the passage in question. Turcan writes that the illustrated Vergilius Vaticanus 3225 was produced by a Roman workshop around 400 CE but appears to derive from an earlier archetype. Iconographic study suggests the existence of an illustrated edition of Vergil on a volumen as early as the Severan period. The incunabulum Paris, BNF, Rés. G. Yc. 236 contains notes by Poliziano on the Eclogues and the Aeneid that contain comparisons with the Ajax, the Oedipus Rex, and the Trachiniae by Sophocles, from which Vespoli deduces that all the quotations by Poliziano coincide with the Sophoclean text preserved in the tenth-century Florence, BML, MS plut. 32.09. Zurli defends the reading dederis against dederit at Aen. 4.436.

THE MIDDLE AGES

- Danovi, Vittorio Remo. 2023. “Six Notes on the Commentary on Vergil’s Eclogues Attributed to Hilary of Orléans.” Myrtia 38: 308–12.
- Gartner, Jakob Maximilian. 2023. “Töten oder schonen? Walter von Châtillons aemulative Gestaltung der Porus-Szene in der Alexandreis und ihre Bedeutung für die Interpretation der Aeneis Vergils.” RFIC 151: 379–424.
- Gibson, Craig A. 2024. “Vergil and St. Paul in John of Alta Silva’s Dolopathos (De rege et septem sapientibus).” Vergilius 70: 73–98.
- Gredler, Mark. 2022. “La historia de Virgilio en la cesta.” In Mujer, saber y heterodoxia: “Libro de Buen Amor,” “La Celestina” y “La Lozana Andaluza”: Homenaje a Folke Gernert, edited by Francisco Toro Ceballos and Folke Gernert, 185–201. Alcalá la Real.
- Kallendorf, Craig. 2020. “Virgil and the Censors: Printing across the Confessional Divide.” In Between the Text and the Page: Studies on the Transmission of Medieval Ideas in Honour of Frank T. Coulson, edited by Harald Anderson and David Turco Gura, 3–27. Papers in Mediaeval Studies 33. Toronto.
- Kragl, Florian. 2023. “Kompromittierender Zweifel und Verzweifeln am Kompromiss: Vergils Götterszenen und ihre Rezeption in den

- Eneasromanen* des 12. Jahrhunderts.” In Kompromissfindung in der Literatur und Kultur des Mittelalters: Strategien und Narrative zwischen Zweifel, Dissens und Aporie, edited by Christiane Witthöft, 295–353. Berlin.
- Lake, Justin. 2023. “Virgil the Fabricator in the Epitaphium Arsenii.” In This Modern Age: Medieval Studies in Honor of Paul Edward Dutton, edited by Courtney M. Booker and Anne Austin Latowsky, 199–218. Budapest.
- Lentano, Mario. 2021. “Lucretio fratri suo poetae claro: Appunti su una variante medievale della biografia virgiliana.” FAM 31 (51): 217–38.
- Maulu, Marco. 2023. “Virgile et Néron dans la Noiron li arabis: Un unicum du manuscrit L.II.14 de la Bibliothèque nationale universitaire de Turin.” Troianalexandrina: Yearbook of Classical Material in Medieval Literature 23: 157–206.
- Muniz, Liebert de Abreu. 2023. “A bugonia nas Geopônicas 15.2 e o tratamento do material técnico latino.” Phaos 23: n.p.
- Tilliette, Jean-Yves. 2024a. “L’Alexandréide de Gautier de Châtillon: Enéide médiévale ou ‘Virgile travesti’?” In Littérature latine du Moyen Âge: Les jeux d’une langue poétique, edited by Jean-Yves Tilliette, 183–96. Essais sur le Moyen Âge 79. Paris.
- . 2024b. “La fortune littéraire du portrait de Fama par Virgile (Aen. 4, 173–190) jusqu’à la fin du Moyen Âge.” Micrologus: Natura, Scienze e Società Medievali 32: 41–64.

Danovi discusses a handful of textual corruptions in the commentary on the Eclogues attributed to Abelard’s pupil Hilary of Orleans (1075–1150). Gartner reads the Poros scene in the Alexandreis, a Latin epic poem composed by the theologian Walter of Châtillon (ca. 1135–1201) on the exploits of Alexander the Great, as imitatio et aemulatio of the final scene of the Aeneid. Aristotle’s speech in that poem also alludes to the end of the Aeneid, as well as to Anchises’s speech in Aen. 6. Gibson argues that the twelfth-century monk Iohannes de Alta Silva’s Dolopathos, a prose treatment of the Seven Sages, is the earliest extant witness to the legend that Vergil and the apostle Paul narrowly missed meeting each other in Sicily. Gredler writes about the medieval legend of Vergil in the basket. Kallendorf considers the various forms of external or self-censorship to which Vergil and the Appendix Vergiliana were subjected in the sixteenth century. Protestant commentators who were particularly targeted by this phenomenon include the German humanists Georg Fabricius (1516–1571), Christoph Hegendorf (1500–1540), Philippus Melanchthon (1497–1560), and Josse Willich (1501–1552). Lake’s paper concerns a funeral oration composed by Paschasius Radbertus (ca. 790–ca. 860) framed as a dialogue between the monks of the abbey of Corbie, in which the author’s fictional persona wrongly accuses Vergil of having stolen a line from Horace. The article considers why Vergil was associated with falsehoods, while Horace could be seen as a philosopher and moralist. Lentano informs us that some biographies of Vergil written in the Franco-German area during the Middle Ages (from the seventh to tenth centuries) mention that Lucretius was Vergil’s maternal uncle, a belief that perhaps reflects an ancient Celtic social institution (avunculate) that was still in operation at the time. Maulu takes as a point of departure the reestablishment of the Old French text of Noirons le Arabis in Biblioteca Nazionale Universitaria di Torino, MS L.11.14, a manuscript damaged in a catastrophic 1904 fire. Discussion focuses on the figure of Vergil and his fictitious genealogy and situates this narrative unit within the larger structure of the manuscript. The Geoponica, a Byzantine collection of twenty books on agronomy and agriculture, offers information on the classical and late antique folk belief in bugonia, the phenomenon (described in Vergil, G. 4.284–318) of restoring a beehive from a dead ox. Muniz compares the Geoponica with the traditions of bugonia represented in the traditions of Vergil and Varro. Tilliette (2024a) also considers the Alexandreis in terms of its generic relationship to the Aeneid.

RENAISSANCE AND TUDOR WRITERS

- Abbamonte, Giancarlo, and Fabio Stok. 2022. “Sulle orme di Pomponio Leto: Il commento alle Georgiche di Aurelio Lippo Brandolini.” Nordic Journal of Renaissance Studies 18: 1–28.
- Filieri, Emilio. 2021. “Dopo corona e mitra: Un dolcissimo patre per Dante; Virgilio oltre la similitudine.” Studi Medievali e Moderni 25: 79–105.
- Funari, Fernando. 2023. “‘Sacrée faim de l’or!’: L’hypotexte virgilien dans les traductions françaises de Purg. XXII, 40–41.” Revue des Études Dantesques 7: 139–60.
- Gervais, Kyle. 2022. “Virgil’s Hero, Turnus: Maffeo Vegio’s and Pier Candido Decembrio’s Supplements to the Aeneid (with a New Edition and Translation of Decembrio).” Renaissance and Reformation 45: 17–49.
- Gros Lladós, Sònia. 2021. “Otium litteratum en la novella cavalleresca Curial e Güelfa.” In La “Cavalleria umanistica” italiana [The Italian “Humanistic Chivalry”]: Enyego (Inico) d’Avalos e Curial e Güelfa [Enyego (Inico) d’Avalos and Curial e Güelfa], edited by Antoni Ferrando

- and Anna Maria Babbi, 43–55. IVITRA Research in Linguistics and Literature 29. Amsterdam.
- Gwynne, Paul. 2024. “Necromancy in Renaissance Rome.” PBSR 92: 153–86.
- Haskell, Yasmin. 2020. “The Tears in Things: How the Jesuits ‘Ripped Up’ Virgil.” PVS 30: 61–75.
- Kirkham, Victoria. 2022. “Virgils in Skirts: An Allegorical Map for the Amorosa visione.” Studi sul Boccaccio 50: 189–220.
- Pugh, Syrithe. 2024. “The Road Not Taken: Dante’s First Eclogue and Virgil’s Career.” IJCT 31: 367–93.
- Smets, Simon. 2022. “Basinio da Parma’s Hesperis: A Homeric-Vergilian Fusion in Text and Paratext.” Humanistica Lovaniensia: Journal of Neo-Latin Studies 71: 147–80.
- Vespoli, Lorenzo. 2022. “The Citations of Apollonius Rhodius’ Argonautica in Angelo Poliziano’s Unpublished Hand Notes to Virgil’s Aeneid.” In Sapiens ubique civis. 3, edited by János Nagyillés, 403–20. Antiquitas – Byzantium – Renascentia 51. Budapest.

Abbamonte and Stok demonstrate that Pomponio Leto (1428–1498) made use of technical works of classical literature (including Strabo for geography, Theophrastus’s works on plants, Columella, Varro, and others), to inaugurate a new way of interpreting the Georgics. Aurelio Brandolini, who was probably in contact with Leto during his stay in Rome (ca. 1480–1490), wrote an unpublished commentary on the Georgics, preserved in the Bibliotheca Apostolica Vaticana, MS Vat. lat. 2740, which presents many aspects of the new trend in Georgics interpretation inaugurated by Leto. Filieri examines Vergil’s farewell to Dante in the Divine Comedy. Through a study of forty-one translations of Purgatory 22.40–41 published between 1800 and 2020, Funari outlines the evolution of the meaning of the sacred (sacré) in French language and culture by examining the reactions of the translators to the Vergilian intertext at Aen. 3.56–57. The oscillation between choices emphasizing the Vergil hypotext or the Dante hypotext allows us to formulate the hypothesis of a slow but progressive retheologization of the Commedia in French literature. Gervais discusses the “supplements” to the Aeneid composed in Latin by the Italian poet Maffeo Vegio (1407–1458) and the Italian humanist Pier Candido Decembrio (1399–1477). Gros Lladós discusses Vergilian influences on the anonymous fifteenth-century Catalan prose romance Curial e Güelfa and the concept of otium that Italian humanists developed from the rediscovery of classical texts. Gwynne analyzes an account, in Latin prose and verse, of a necromantic ritual performed by members of the Roman Academy in which the shades of Cicero and Vergil are conjured from the pagan underworld to admire the Renaissance city. It can be argued that these texts, preserved in Florence, Bibliotheca Riccardiana, MS 996, are evidence of a dramatic performance staged by the members of the reformed academy as part of their annual celebrations of the Palilia (or Parilia) on Rome's birthday, 21 April, ca. 1501. Haskell argues that, although Vergil was the Roman poet most revered by early modern Jesuits, yet his significance for the society is elusive. Two poems from the early and final days of the Old Society of Jesuits before its restoration in 1814 reveal Jesuit concerns at critical historical moments for the order: these are Francesco Benci's Quinque martyres (Venice, 1591) and Emmanuel de Azevedo's Heroum libri IV (Louvain, 1789). Kirkham argues that the Decameron by Giovanni Boccaccio (1313–1375) highlights the instability of Reason in poetry, where a metaphysically male power is often symbolized in female figures. Pugh discusses two eclogues by Dante Alighieri (1265–1321), his only known compositions in Latin verse, that were written as a recusatio in response to a verse epistle sent to him by the humanist scholar Giovanni del Virgilio (d. 1319), in which Giovanni pressed Dante to compose a martial epic in Latin celebrating contemporary Italian military victories, which would prove him a worthy successor to the author of the Aeneid. The Neo-Latin epic Hesperis by Basinio da Parma (1425–1457) combines two main intertexts: Vergil's Aeneid and the Homeric epics. Smets argues that Basinio's paratextual features, and in particular his marginal annotations, highlight on a metapoetical level the difficulties of combining two closely related but conflicting literary models.

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

Hardie, Philip. 2023. "The Tradition of Virgilian Travesty and Mock Epic." PVS 31: 1–25.

Valdivieso, Erika. 2024. "Searching for Dido in the Latin Epics of Colonial Mexico." TAPA 154: 537–76.

A travesty, Hardie notes, is the clothing of the lofty matter of epic in low manners and low language; while mock heroic is the application of the lofty generic features of epic to undignified or trivial subject matter. What the two genres share is an incongruity between form and matter. The Europe-wide fashion for travesties of the Aeneid in the seventeenth century and the vogue in France and England for mock-heroic poetry in the late seventeenth and first half of the eighteenth centuries provide examples of these genres. Valdivieso notices that, although Dido is a common feature of early modern imitations of the Aeneid, there is no Dido figure in extant seventeenth-century Latin epics from the Americas. This lacuna is a form of colonial loss and can be traced to Dido's elimination from the Jesuit curriculum and Jesuit textbooks.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

Ribeiro Leite, Leni, and Dreykon Fernandes Nascimento. 2025. "Uses of the Aeneid in O Uruguay (1769), by Basílio da Gama, as Indices of uariatio between the Epic and the Tragic." CRJ 17: 93–111.

Despite the epic unity of the poem O Uruguay by the Portuguese-Brazilian poet Basílio da Gama (1740–1795), Ribeiro Leite and Fernandes Nascimento detect continuous exchanges between epic and tragic, a characteristic influenced by the poem's model, the Aeneid, and a tool used also by Gama for political commentary.

NINETEENTH CENTURY

Vallana, Fulvio. 2023. "Looking at Infinity, Looking at the Sky: Virgil's Eclogues and Leopardi's Bucolic Poems." PVS 31: 147–71.

—. 2025. "Virgilian Heroism(s) in Giacomo Leopardi's All'Italia." IJCT 32: 121–41.

Vallana (2023) observes that it is not easy to find textual allusions to the Eclogues in the Idylls by the Italian poet Giacomo Leopardi (1798–1837). But the fact that the poems are called Idylls, by their author's choice, asks us to consider them in their bucolic dimension and to investigate how far their forms and contents are indebted to the tradition of bucolic poetry and how much can be attributed instead to Leopardi's original interpretation of bucolic. Vallana (2025) examines Vergilian echoes in Leopardi's poem All'Italia, focusing on how he drew on heroic figures from the Aeneid to shape his vision of modern heroism.

TWENTIETH CENTURY

Ball, Robert J. 2024. "Edmund Wilson's Letter to Gilbert Highet about Highet's Book The Classical Tradition." Vergilius 70: 99–130.

Bellei, Francesca. 2021. "Omnibus umbra locis adero: Elena Ferrante and the Poetics of Absence." In Unspoken Rome: Absence in Latin Literature and Its Reception, edited by Tom Geue and Elena Giusti, 270–88. Cambridge, UK.

Mac Góráin, Fiachra. 2020. “Language Politics in the Aeneid and Friel’s Translations.” PVS 30: 1–25.

Vallortigara, Laura. 2022. L’epos impossibile: Il mito di Enea nel Novecento. Macerata.

Ball publishes a 1949 letter from the American writer and literary critic Edmund Wilson (1895–1972) to Gilbert Highet (1906–1978), which ushered in reviews of Highet’s book The Classical Tradition and played a part in Highet’s and Wilson’s admiration of Vergil. Bellei uses the lens of absence to explore the use of Dido as a model for the two protagonists of the Neapolitan Novels by the pseudonymous Italian novelist Elena Ferrante (1943–). Mac Góráin’s interactive interpretation of the Aeneid and the 1981 play Translations by the Irish dramatist and short-story writer Brian Patrick Friel (1929–2015) helps us to look more closely at language difference in the Aeneid. By puncturing the poem’s linguistic uniformity with occasional references to language difference, Mac Góráin argues, Vergil makes a remarkable statement of imperial whitewash and supremacy. Vallortigara discusses the varying receptions of the myth of Aeneas in the twentieth century and today.

TWENTY-FIRST CENTURY

Hinds, Stephen. 2025. “Bann Valley Eclogues.” In Augoustakis, Frangoulidis, and Thorsen, 397–412.

Maurice, Lisa. 2018. “No Arms and the Man? Virgil’s Aeneid in Modern Popular Culture.” SCI 37: 111–27.

Hinds offers a selective exploration of three “eclogues” by Seamus Heaney in his 2001 collection Electric Light, which variously involve translation of Vergil, adaptation of Vergil, and conversation with Vergil. Maurice observes that the Aeneid, perhaps more than any other text, has had a profound impact on Western literature and society. Yet, even though Homeric receptions of the Trojan War continue to multiply, there have been remarkably few receptions of the Aeneid in modern popular culture. She offers an overview of its reception in popular fiction, children’s literature, poetry, screen, and stage, before making suggestions about why Vergil’s poem has failed to take hold in the way that Homer’s have.

VERGIL AND THE ARTS

- Bensch, Matthias. 2023. Held im Bild: Zur visuellen Konstruktion heroischer Figuren im Imperium Romanum anhand von Darstellungen des Aeneas und des Romulus. Rahden.
- Hallett, Christopher H. 2023. “The Role of References to the Visual Arts in Vergil’s Aeneid.” Maia 75: 233–50.
- Pergola, Agnese, and Chiara Giobbe. 2023. “L’Eneide rappresentata nelle raccolte del Museo Nazionale Romano.” Maia 75: 278–96.
- Sauron, Gilles. 2023. “Virgilio e l’arte greca: Iconografia, stile, composizione.” Maia 75: 251–64.

Hallett notes that the exegesis of some passages in the Aeneid (2.707–25 and 7.630–34) does not presuppose an allusion to other texts, but to artistic images. Sauron shows that Vergil’s ekphrases in Ecl. 3.35–48 and Aen. 8.671–713 reveal his precise knowledge of Greek art and its different styles. Pergola and Giobbe analyze artworks dating to the first century CE and created for private use, now housed in the Museo Nazionale Romano, that offer representations of myths of Rome’s origin or refer to Vergil’s Aeneid. Comparison with pieces datable to a period preceding the poem’s composition shows that, when the iconographic tradition had not yet consolidated around standard forms, artists turned to the literary tradition, which was rich in figurative details.

Duke University

